

CHIEF COURT OF THE PUNJAB

CIRCULAR MEMO

No 14 2549 G—Dated Lahore the 1st June 1894

TO—ALL SESSIONS JUDGES DISTRICT MAGISTRATES CANTONMENT MAGISTRATES AND OFFICERS EXERCISING MAGISTERIAL POWERS IN MILITARY STATIONS

Irregularities in procedure in the trial of offences by officers exercising magisterial powers in military stations

The Judges have observed that officers exercising magisterial powers in military stations do not always follow the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure in dealing with cases coming before them in a judicial capacity. Even in the larger cantonments to which a trained Cantonment Magistrate is usually attached, it has been found that breaches of cantonment rules, offences under section 34 of the Police Act, and similar cases are not always dealt with according to law, while in smaller military stations, where an untrained military officer is usually invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the third class, it frequently happens that no proper record of evidence and of the proceedings is maintained and that, very generally, all that is done is to enter the name of the person tried the offence committed and the nature of the punishment awarded in a book kept for the purpose, but not authorized by law. Several instances have come to notice in which Cantonment Magistrates exercising summary powers have failed to comply with the requirements of the Code as to the manner in which summary trials shall be conducted.

Ordinary rules of procedure must be observed by Sessions Judges and District Magistrates to afford good and efficient supervision.

2 In cases in which an untrained and inexperienced officer is invested with magisterial powers for the purpose of dealing with petty breaches of sanitary and other similar rules, the same knowledge of the law cannot perhaps be expected as may well be required from officers permanently holding the office of Cantonment Magistrate after undergoing the usual examinations in law and procedure, but the Judges must insist on the ordinary rules of procedure being observed by all officers exercising criminal jurisdiction under their superintendence and control, and look to Sessions Judges and District Magistrates to exercise proper supervision over the way in which such officers discharge their magisterial duties and to afford guidance to those who need it. The general rules governing the trial of criminal cases are not difficult to master and any officer who undertakes magisterial duties must make himself acquainted with them.

3 A wide distinction must be made between the administrative and judicial functions of military officers invested with authority under the law applicable to military stations. Fines imposed on the members of sanitary and other establishments for neglect of duty, &c., are so imposed under administrative authority, and with such matters the Chief Court has no concern. But when any person is charged with an offence against the criminal law (whether such offence falls under the Indian Penal Code, the Cantonments Act and Rules made thereunder, the Police Act, or any other local or special law or rule made thereunder in force in a military station), he is entitled to be tried before a competent court in accordance with the procedure prescribed for conducting criminal trials.

Distinction to be drawn between administrative and judicial functions

4 Criminal proceedings may be initiated in one of three ways, described in section 191* of the Code of Criminal Procedure, viz., (a) on complaint (b) on a police report, or (c) on information received from any person other than a Police Officer, or in the Magistrate's own knowledge or suspicion. By Punjab Government Notification No 99, dated the 3rd February 1883 all Magistrates are empowered to take cognizance of offences under clause (a) or clause (b) and all Magistrates of the first or second class may take cognizance of offences under clause (c).

Initiation of criminal proceedings

5 The first step in initiating proceedings upon complaint is to examine the complainant (section 200 of the Code) on oath or affirmation, and to reduce the substance of the examination to writing. The Magistrate should consult the second schedule of the Code to satisfy himself as to his power to take cognizance of the offence. If the complaint has been made in writing and the Magistrate is not competent to take cognizance of the case, he will proceed as directed in section 201.

Examination of complainant

6 Section 202 empowers Magistrates of the first and second class to make, or cause to be made, further inquiry before issuing process. Directions on this subject are given in Judicial Circular No L (3rd edition of Judicial Circulars).

Inquiry under section 202, Code of Criminal Procedure

7 If the Magistrate considers that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding he may dismiss the complaint under section 203.

Dismissal of complaint under section 203

Procedure—Criminal]

Issue of process

8 If he considers that there is sufficient ground for calling upon the accused to answer the complaint he will issue a summons or a warrant as laid down in section 204

Procedure in inquiry into cases triable by Court of Session or High Court

9 When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate the latter must first consider whether he has power to try the case himself or whether the case is triable only by the Court of Session or High Court In the latter event he must proceed (provided he is competent to commit for trial) in the manner described in Chapter XVIII of the Code

Three modes of procedure in cases triable by Magistrates

10 If the case is triable by the Magistrate himself he must proceed in one of the following ways —

- (a) In the manner prescribed in Chapter XX of the Code if the case is a summons case as defined in section 4 (i)
- (b) In the manner prescribed in Chapter XXI if the case is a warrant case
- (c) In the manner prescribed in Chapter XXII if the case is one which may be tried summarily and the Magistrate is empowered to try offences summarily In this connection it may be observed that under section 530 of the Code if any Magistrate not being empowered by law in this behalf tries an offender summarily his proceedings are void

Procedure in summary trial

11 It is important to notice that for summary trials two modes of procedure are prescribed one to be followed in cases where there is no appeal (section 263) and the other to be followed in appealable cases (section 264) In appealable cases a formal judgment must be recorded, in non appealable cases the particulars required by section 263 must be recorded in a special register of summary trials and even in the latter class of cases the Magistrate should record the brief statement of the reasons for conviction (clause h) in such manner that this court on revision may be able to judge whether there are sufficient materials to support the conviction The register above mentioned must be used only for trials conducted under Chapter XXII of the Code

[Procedure—Criminal]

12 Directions as to the mode of recording evidence are contained in Chapter XXV. In summons cases only a memorandum of the substance of the evidence has to be recorded (section 350). In other cases the whole of the evidence must be taken down by the Magistrate or in his presence and hearing. The examination of the accused is to be recorded as directed in section 364.

13 The law relating to bail is contained in Chapter XXXIX of the Bail Code

14. A list of the registers to be maintained is given in Part II of Judicial Circular No. XLV. The forms of the Registers will be found in Appendix No. I of the Judicial Circulars.

10 With regard to the recovery and disposal of fines imposed under magisterial authority the provisions of Judicial Circular No LXI must be observed. Such fines must invariably be paid into the public accounts such portions of them as may under the orders of Government be payable into the Cantonment Fund being subsequently drawn from the treasury by the Cantonment Committee in the usual manner. The Magistrate's duty ends with placing the fine in the treasury any subsequent action being taken by the Cantonment authorities. Thus a Cantonment Magistrate must not confuse duties as a Magistrate with functions which he may exercise in connection with the Cantonment Committee or Cantonment authority under the Cantonments Act.

16 As regards establishments it is in the power of the District Magistrate to apply in the usual manner for such establishment as may be necessary for every officer who exercises magisterial powers in his district. If the Cantonment Committee or Cantonment authority do not provide a proper establishment the matter should be referred for the orders of Government.

FORMS OF REGISTERS (CRIMINAL)

Copies of documents filed in the Courts and Offices of Ajmere Merwarra will be made by Section writers appointed for each Court with the previous sanction of the Commissioner and District Judge

Provided that in Courts and Offices where the copying work is not sufficiently remunerative for the employment of a Section writer the duty of preparing copies may with the sanction of the Commissioner and District Judge, be delegated to a member of the Court or office establishment

2 So far as practicable such Section writers only should be appointed as are qualified under the standing orders of Government for employment in Government service

3 The presiding Officer of each Court or Office shall exercise the necessary supervision with a view to ensure the correct and prompt preparation of copies their delivery to the applicants, and the due accounting and adjustment of the fees realized from them

4 In the Courts and Offices of the Commissioner the Assistant Commissioners the Judicial Assistant Commissioner the Cantonment Magistrate, Nasirabad and the Extra Assistant Commissioner the Section writers shall perform their work under the immediate supervision of the Head Clerk, Clerk of Court or the Reader as the presiding Officer may think fit

5 The fees shall be collected in cash by the officer to whom applications for copies are presented and shall be received by the particular Sectioner by whom they are earned but nothing herein contained shall prevent the distribution of fees among the several Sectioners employed in a Court or Office in such manner as may be determined by the presiding Officer with the concurrence of the Commissioner and District Judge

CHAPTER II

Persons who are entitled to copies

6 A plaintiff or a defendant is entitled at any stage of the suit to obtain copies of the record of the suit including exhibits which have been put in as evidence and memoranda of depositions of witnesses provided that a party who has been ordered to file a written statement is not entitled to inspect or take a copy of a written statement filed by another party until he has filed his own

7 A stranger to the suit may after decree obtain, as of right, copies of the plaint written statements, affidavits and petitions filed in the suit and may for sufficient reason shown to the satisfaction of the Court, obtain copies of any such documents before decree

8 A stranger to the suit may also obtain, as of right, copies of judgments decrees or orders at any time after they have been passed or made

9 For sufficient reason shown to its satisfaction, a Court may grant to a stranger to the suit copies of exhibits put in evidence not being of the nature referred to in section 130 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872

10 An accused person or a person affected by a judgment or order of a Criminal Court, is entitled to a copy of the judgment or order or any other proceeding

Explanation — A complainant is within the meaning of this rule

11 The Magistrate of the District and the District Superintendent of Police are entitled to copies of judgments of the Court of Session

12 A commanding Officer or the Head of a Department is entitled to copies of judgments of the Court of Session in cases where a soldier or a public officer subordinate to him is convicted of an offence

13 Government law officers are entitled to copies of decrees in pauper suits and appeals

14 Government law officers and any person specially authorized in this behalf by the Magistrate of the District are entitled to copies of the whole or part of any record when required for the purpose of conducting any trial or investigation or appeal on the part of Government in any Criminal Court

15 Copies of official correspondence and reports should not, as a rule, be granted Should any one apply for a copy of a letter received from superior authority, he should be referred to the officer from whose office the letter issued

CHAPTER III

Collection of copying charges and computation of stamps on copies

16 For the preparation of copies other than those granted free of charge under these rules a uniform charge, which will be levied in cash, will be made at the rate of four annas for the first folio and two annas for each subsequent folio Each folio shall be ruled and shall contain twenty five lines, each line to contain no more nor less than six English or twelve Vernacular words

17 The Court fee payable under the Court Fees Act, 1870, will be levied by affixing the proper stamp to the first folio of the copy

18 When a copy is chargeable with stamp duty under article 22 of Schedule I of the Indian Stamp Act, 1879, the heading of the copy, or, if there is no heading to be copied then the first line of the copy will be written along the middle of the face of the sheet, bearing the impressed stamp which represents the stamp duty chargeable on the copy

19 Under article 1 (a) Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, every application for a copy must bear a court fee stamp of one anna, unless it be made by, or on behalf of, a prisoner or other person in duress or under restraint of any Court or its officers, or be of the nature described in Rule 29

20 For the purposes of these rules copies chargeable under the Court Fees Act, 1870, are copies of (i) judgments or orders not being, or having the force of decrees, (ii) decrees or orders having the force of decrees, (iii) documents liable to stamp duty under the Indian Stamp Act, 1879, when left by parties to suits or proceedings in place of originals withdrawn under Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, (iv) any judicial proceeding not otherwise provided for by the Court Fees Act, 1870, and (v) any accounts, statements reports or the like, taken out of any Civil or Criminal Court or Office under s 156, and direct the police to submit a charge sheet. That means a Magistrate cannot proceed under Chapter XIV after acting under Chapter XVI.⁵ When a complaint is referred under this section by the Magistrate for investigation, the police need do no more than make a report.⁶ But this does not deprive them from exercising their ordinary powers of arrest and investigation and from sending up the accused for trial under a charge sheet.⁷ The Bombay High Court⁸ and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court⁹ have, however, held that where an investigation by the police has been ordered under this section, the police have no power to send up the accused for trial under a charge sheet.

- (3) Where the accused is a police officer — If the accused is himself a police officer, it is not proper nor is it contemplated that the Magistrate should call for a report from the police officer, who is himself the accused¹⁰ or from a superior or other police officer.¹¹ In such cases the Magistrate himself should hold the inquiry¹² or direct a local inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate.¹³ Complaints against police-officers should be handled with the greatest care. In such cases, the complainant should be given every facility to prove his allegations.¹⁴

It is not desirable that a complaint against a person who is alleged to have acted in collusion with the police should be handed over to the police for investigation.¹⁵ It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case¹⁶ that it is not illegal to send a complaint, in which the bona fides of the police are impugned, for inquiry or investigation by a police officer.

(4) Report — The report called for under this section should form part of the record and as such a copy thereof can be given to the accused¹⁷ The report should be submitted to the same Magistrate who had ordered the investigation and not to another Magistrate¹⁸ Such a report is absolutely privileged¹⁹

19 “Such other person” — The Magistrate may direct an investigation by such other person as he thinks fit Such other person under this section includes a panchayat within the meaning of the U P Village Panchayat Act¹ A master is not a fit person to be directed to investigate and make a report in a case of complaint against his servant²

It is illegal for a Magistrate to call upon the accused himself to make a report and act upon it³

20 Examination of the complainant — Proviso — The proviso to subs (1) makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to examine the complainant on oath before directing an inquiry or investigation under this section save in the case where the complaint is by a Court Under this section before it was amended in 1973 such an examination was a pre requisite whether the Magistrate intended to make a personal inquiry himself or whether he intended to give a direction for an inquiry or investigation The present proviso requires such examination to be made only where a direction for inquiry is to be made and not where the Magistrate intends to make a personal inquiry himself The intention of the Legislature in enacting this proviso seems to be that the Magistrate should thoroughly understand the case before he decides to postpone the issue of process and embarks upon the unusual procedure of getting the matter investigated by some other agency¹

A complaint therefore cannot be sent for inquiry or investigation unless the complainant has been examined on oath² and if any report of such an enquiry or investi gation is called for without such examination, and is made, it is without jurisdiction and cannot form the basis of any further action and a complainant, who was not examined, cannot be prosecuted with regard to his complaint, dismissed on such a report³ Nor can the complaint be dismissed under S 203 merely on the basis of such report without examining the complainant on oath⁴ But the Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence on the basis of a report by a police officer submitted under this section and in such a case, cognizance will be taken under clause (b) and not clause (c) of S 190⁵ As to whether non-compliance with the proviso is curable under section 537, see Note 23.

21. Powers of the inquiring or investigating officer.

- (1) A Magistrate inquiring into a case can exercise all the powers of a Magistrate, including the power of taking evidence of witnesses on oath. But he has not the powers of a police officer to keep an accused in custody for the purpose of an inquiry¹
- (2) A police officer making an investigation under this section has all the powers conferred on him under Chapter XIV. He can make a full inquiry from the complainant and his witnesses and the defendant and his witnesses²
- (3) Any other person directed to make an investigation has all the powers of an officer in charge of the police station except the power of arrest without warrant,³ i.e., the powers conferred under ss 53, 56, 94, 127, 128, 153, 156 and 157, the power to arrest without warrant remains with the Magistrate and a police officer⁴

section has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice the High Court will not make any order in revision, which can result only in harassment to the parties and the waste of public time.² The following are instances of such irregularities where the High Court will not interfere unless there is a failure of justice —

- (1) the omission of the Magistrate to record reasons for postponing issue of process³
- (2) requiring the accused to attend at the inquiry or his examination thereat and allowing of cross-examination and arguments *inter partes*⁴
- (3) omission to examine the complainant under the proviso⁵
- (4) mere inadequacy of the inquiry the High Court will not interfere with the details of an inquiry or investigation⁶
- (5) where the Magistrate has exercised his discretion under this section to postpone the issue of process⁷ or where the Magistrate does not record the statements of witnesses examined before him but relies on the statements made before the police⁸

Where however, in a case, where the inquiry is made by the police in a perfunctory manner and the report is considered by the Magistrate also in a perfunctory manner, the High Court will interfere and insist on the provisions of the section being strictly complied with, though where the inquiry has been carefully made and considered, it will refuse to interfere.⁹

S 552⁵ or S 145⁶ of the Code

The materials on which the Magistrate is to act are expressly limited by the section to —

- (1) the statement on oath (if any) of the complainant, and
- (2) the result of any investigation or inquiry under S 202,⁷ anything outside it must be discarded⁸

Thus the Court cannot take into consideration the statements of witnesses examined by the police⁹ or the evidence adduced in a counter case,¹⁰ or the result of a police inquiry not ordered by the Magistrate¹¹ or the result of an inquiry on a previous petition,¹² or the result of investigation ordered under S 202 but not held in compliance with its terms,¹³ again the Court cannot ordinarily permit the opposite party to appear and argue that process should not issue. Where, however, the complainant has obtained an order for the seizure of the opposite party's books and for restraining him from operating on his banking account the opposite party can appear and ask that such orders should be vacated.¹⁴ As to whether the proper course when a complaint is presented without the sanction required by S 197 is to dismiss it under this section, see Note 11 on S 197.

This section does not apply to complaints under the Merchant Shipping Act (21 [XXI] of 1923), which cannot therefore be dismissed under this section.¹⁵

2 "May dismiss the complaint." — Where a complaint is made to a Magistrate he has either to dismiss it under this section or issue process under Section 204.¹ Ho cannot pass any other kind of order. Thus he cannot direct the police to submit a charge sheet to some other Magistrate,² or submit the complaint to the District Magistrate after disbelieving the complaint³ or order the issue of a search warrant after holding that no criminal case would lie.⁴

Where a Magistrate dismisses a complaint under this section there must be a specific order to that effect.⁵ The order must be a judicial order.⁶

The following orders have been held to be dismissals of complaints under this section

- (1) An order refusing to issue process on a complaint⁷
- (2) An endorsement on a complaint, "Enter as false. No prosecution."⁸
- (3) An order staying proceedings against some accused while proceeding with the case against others in this case there is dismissal of the complaint so far as the former persons are concerned.⁹
- (4) An order holding the complaint to be false and calling upon the complainant to show cause against his prosecution.¹⁰

The following orders have been held not to be dismissals of complaints under this section

- (1) Where a charge is made to the police and is repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate and the Magistrate passes a departmental order to the police, 'show as false' but no order is passed on the complaint itself.¹¹
- (2) A direction to the police after a complaint was referred to them that the complaint may be struck off the police file.¹²
- (3) An order expunging a charge from the list of reported offences.¹³ In this case there is no complaint at all to be dismissed.
- (4) An endorsement on the complaint 'Notice is discharged'.¹⁴
- (5) A refusal to take cognizance of an offence for want of sanction (now complaint) under s 195.¹⁵

3 Magistrate. — The word Magistrate must mean a Magistrate to whom the Code applies. The Code does not apply to proceedings before Village Magistrate (see section 1) and a dismissal by a Village Magistrate of such a proceeding is not dismissal of a complaint under this section ¹

4 Orders on complaint not to be delayed — There is nothing in the Code to show that the Magistrate must at once consider the complaint ¹ He must however, pass orders as expeditiously as possible it will be improper to delay the passing of orders for months. As to the disposal of counter complaints see the undermentioned case ³

5. "Sufficient ground for proceeding" — The question whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding must as has been seen in Note 1 already, be based upon the materials referred to in the section namely, the statement on oath of the complainant and the result of any investigation or inquiry under S 90. Where the facts alleged in the complaint constitute an offence and there are no circumstances apparent in the examination of the complainant such as contradictions variations or serious and unexplained delay in instituting proceedings justifying the Court in concluding that the complaint is false there would be a prima facie case for proceeding ¹ Where on the other hand the allegations contained in the complaint and in the complainant's oral statement disclose no criminal offence ² or are self contradictory so as to be self-destructive or are physically impossible or involve an extreme degree of improbability, and so forth, as well as in cases in which the allegations made, though nothing can be said a priori of their possibility or probability, are practically incapable of proof, there can be no sufficient ground for proceeding.³ Similarly, a Magistrate can dismiss a complaint if he considers with reason that the most serious allegations of grave offences are falsely interlarded with complaints of a lesser kind.⁴ Unreasonable delay in filing a complaint under s. 211, Penal Code, has been held to be a sufficiently good reason for refusing to proceed with the complaint.⁵

Where the complaint shows only a civil dispute as to title or as to other civil claims, a Magistrate ought not to deal with them but should dismiss the complaint.⁶ The

A Magistrate cannot dismiss a case off hand unless a prima facie case of any kind is made out⁹ Where a prima facie case is made out the following are not sufficient grounds on which a complaint can be dismissed

- (1) The fact that besides the complainant other persons could complain against an accused¹⁰
- (2) The fact that a libellous publication complained of is a mere republication¹¹
- (3) The withdrawal of the complaint by the complainant in a warrant case which is non compoundable¹²

4. The fact that there was some possibility that the accused might have some defence

A court, as well as a party, has a right to an adjudication on the point whether there is a sufficient ground for proceeding before his complaint is dismissed. The decision whether there is sufficient ground for dismissing a complaint must be reached by the exercise of common law legal principles and considerations. Thus a complaint should not be entertained although it is apparently false and liable to lead to perjury are made in it—allegations which are true in the present case even as regards the morally true part of it."

It is only in very rare cases that a Court will be justified in throwing out a complaint without giving an opportunity to the complainant to substantiate his allegations. But in certain cases it becomes the duty of the Court to protect the accused from unnecessary harassment and delay, and prevent an abuse of the process of the Court.²⁷

A Magistrate cannot dismiss a case off-hand unless a prima facie case of any kind is not made out.⁹ Where a prima facie case is made out, the following are not sufficient grounds on which a complaint can be dismissed—

- (1) The fact that besides the complainant other persons could complain against an accused¹⁰
- (2) The fact that a libellous publication complained of is a mere republication.¹¹
- (3) The withdrawal of the complaint by the complainant in a warrant case which is non compoundable¹²
- (4) The absence of personal injury to the complainant and the complainant being a mere tool of another person¹³
- (5) The fact that the complainant had no personal knowledge of the facts of the complaint¹⁴
- (6) The fact that the complainant is of low caste.¹⁵
- (7) The fact that the charge might be laid to the police in the first instance.¹⁶
- (8) The fact that the complaint was not preferred by a person more responsible than the one who preferred it¹⁷
- (9) The fact that there is no possibility of a conviction¹⁸
- (10) The fact that the person complained against has been exonerated in a previous departmental inquiry in which the complainant has no concern¹⁹
- (11) The fact that the complaint is cognizable by another Magistrate²⁰
- (12) The fear that the entertainment of the complaint would encourage hundreds of such complainants and would stir up old religious feelings of animosity between communities²¹

There is no ground for the Magistrate's own personal knowledge of the affair, or even of the facts of the case, before he is asked to make the complaint.²²

The Magistrate must be satisfied that the proceeding would be undesirable on the motive or on the facts of the case, or that the complaint is barred by law or otherwise.²³

The fact that a previous complaint has been dismissed under s. 203²⁴

1. The fact that there was some possibility that the accused might have some defence is not a bar to the complaint.²⁵

A Magistrate has no right to an adjournment on the point whether there is a ground for proceeding before his complaint is dismissed.²⁶ The decision whether there is a ground for dismissing a complaint must be reached by the exercise of common sense and judicial considerations.²⁷ Thus a complaint should not be entertained where the facts are so clearly false as to lead to perjury are made in it—allegations which are so obviously untrue as to make it unreasonable to suppose them to be true.²⁸

It is only in very rare cases that a Court will be justified in throwing out a complaint without giving an opportunity to the complainant to substantiate his allegations. But in certain cases it becomes the duty of the Court to protect the accused from unnecessary harassment and prevent an abuse of the process of the Court.²⁹

Even if the complaint is transferred to a superior Magistrate solely for the purpose of transferring it to another, the Magistrate to whom it is sent for transfer can dismiss a complaint under this section³

The Magistrate to whom the complaint is transferred cannot, however, dismiss the complaint without giving notice to the complainant of such transfer⁴

If a complaint is transferred at the very outset to another Magistrate, he has power to take action under ss 202 and 203. But when one Magistrate has examined witnesses under s 202 and believed them, and thereupon transfers the case to another Magistrate, the latter has no power to examine the same witnesses again and proceed to dismiss the complaint under this section⁵

Where a complaint is dismissed under this section and further inquiry is ordered under s 436 the Magistrate before whom the complaint comes for such further inquiry can again dismiss it under this section⁶

7. Effect of dismissal.—A dismissal of a complaint after hearing the complainant and after considering the result of an investigation under s 202 amounts to a legal determination of the complaint¹ and the complainant can be prosecuted for making a false charge under s 182 or s 211, Penal Code². But until a complaint is dismissed under this section or otherwise disposed of no proceedings can be taken under s 182 or s 211, Penal Code³. This rule is not based on any statute but is only a precautionary rule of safety in respect of prosecutions under s 182 or s 211 of the Penal Code. So, while a prosecution under those sections might in certain circumstances be delayed or even set aside in accordance with the practice, this practice could per se be no ground for setting aside a conviction under s 211 or s 182 before the disposal of the case⁴

It is not necessary that this section does not afford a ground for proceeding under S 203. It is not necessary that it be afforded an opportunity to prove his case before he is prosecuted under S 201 or S 202. But where he has had such an opportunity and the result of the complaint is that he only after hearing him and taking into account the evidence before him, he cannot be said that he has not been given an opportunity to prove his case.

Where a complaint is made under this section is illegal for want of the examination of the complainant under S 203 the complainant cannot be prosecuted for bringing a false complaint.

As to what compensation can be made against the complainant when a complaint under this section is dismissed, see Note 7 on S 250 and as to a suit for damages for prosecution see Note on S 254.

Where a complaint has been dismissed under this section, it cannot be said that it was made on the false statement of the complainant. Therefore, no power under S 436 to order

Dismissal without examining complainant. — The "statement on oath" referred to is the examination of the complainant under s 200¹ Where the complainant is present but not examined under that section, the material on which the Court could say whether there is sufficient ground or not is not availed of by the Court, and consequently the Court cannot dismiss the complaint² But when the complainant is absent on the dates on which the matter comes up for examination of the complainant, it is clear that an order dismissing the complaint is justified³

9 "And the result of the investigation or inquiry (if any) under Section 202." — Where an inquiry is ordered under s 202 and in that inquiry the complainant says that he has witnesses to prove his case, he should be given an opportunity of proving his case before the complaint is dismissed on the basis of the result of such in the case of a complaint under S. 202, if the complainant declines to prove his case ex parte, it may be said that the Magistrate is wrong in dismissing the complaint under this section.

When the complaint under S. 202 is found to have been insufficient, the Court of appeal may set aside the dismissal of the complaint based on the result of such insufficiency and order a further inquiry.¹ In complaints against police officers and other Government officials, it will be a proper exercise of discretion if the Magistrate orders an inquiry at the time of giving the complainant every opportunity to prove his allegations.²

To say, if any, clearly shows that this section empowers the Magistrate to dismiss a case without any investigation or inquiry under S. 202, if after examining the complaint he considers there is no sufficient reason for proceeding.³

The words, if any, were omitted from the Code by the amending Act 18 (XVIII) of 1923 and were restored to the section by the amending Act 2 (III) of 1925. The reasons for this restoration given in the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the amending Act of 1925 are as follows:

'The Code has High Court in a recent decision (in the case of Srish Chandra Bora v. Mohan Lal Surra) held that under S. 203, an investigation or an inquiry under S. 202 is necessary in all cases because the words 'if any' have been omitted from S. 203 after the words 'investigation or inquiry'. No such change was intended by the amendment made by Act 18 (XVIII) of 1923 and the proposed addition is made to clear this matter.'

When on further inquiry being ordered into a complaint dismissed under this section, the case is sent to another Magistrate for disposal, he is entitled to act on the result of the inquiry or investigation ordered by the Magistrate who originally disposed of the case.⁴

10. "Shall record his reasons for so doing."—A Magistrate should record his reasons for dismissing a complaint under this section¹ The section is mandatory and the Magistrate must make it apparent in his order that he has not omitted to apply his mind to the facts before he made the order² The object of this requirement is to enable the High Court to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate has been properly exercised or not³ This is an imperative provision of law and where no reasons are recorded the order of dismissal is without jurisdiction⁴ It has, however, been held that where on a complaint filed against several persons, the lower Court has declined to issue process against some of them and it appears to the High Court from the records that there are no sufficient grounds for issuing process against them, the High Court will not interfere in revision merely because the Magistrate has failed to give reasons for not issuing process, but that when it appears that the Magistrate had not good grounds for declining to issue process, the High Court will interfere in revision⁵

It has been held that reasons stated in a police report on the basis of which an order of dismissal is made are sufficient if the report itself is part of the order⁶

11. Second complaint.—A dismissal under this section is a dismissal without trial. As to whether such a dismissal is a bar to the re-hearing of the complaint or to the entertainment of a second complaint, see section 403 and Notes thereon

12. Further inquiry.—As to ordering of a 'further inquiry' into a complaint dismissed under this section see Note 9 and S 436 and Notes thereon

13. Abatement—See Note 6 on Section 217

14. Appeal.—Under s 404, no appeal will lie from any order, unless specifically provided for by the Code and no appeal is provided from an order of dismissal under this section. Further inquiry alone is provided for in section 436

1 Legislative changes

The words 'if he has not jurisdiction himself' in sub-section (1) were inserted and sub-section (2) was added in the Code of 1893.

2 Scope of the section —

Where the Magistrate does not dismiss the complaint under S 203 but is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding he has to commence proceedings against the accused by compelling his attendance before the Court. This section relates to the procedure for effecting such attendance.¹

This is the only section authorizing a Magistrate to issue process to an accused whether he takes cognizance on a private complaint or on a police report² or any information or knowledge other than a complaint or police report³. This section applies not only where the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under the Indian Penal Code but also where he takes cognizance of an offence under any other law.⁴

There is no specific provision either in this section or elsewhere in the Code in regard to cases in which the accused is already under arrest or on bail. In such cases if the

Magistrate thinks that there is no case against the accused he may discharge him or cancel the bail bond as the case may be⁵ or if the Magistrate considers that there is sufficient ground for proceeding he may order the accused to be produced before the Court for inquiry or trial⁶

Unless and until the Magistrate issues process for the attendance of the accused, the judicial proceedings cannot be deemed as having commenced against him⁷ Even where the case is a police case and the accused has been arrested and remanded to custody, the judicial proceedings against him cannot be considered as having commenced until the Magistrate has made up his mind to act upon the charge sheet and takes some overt action to implement his decision e g, by ordering the accused to be produced from custody on a particular date to stand his trial⁸

For form of warrant, see S 75 and Sch V, Form No II

3 Magistrate taking cognizance only can issue process — Section 190 mentions the ordinary ways in which a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence Unless he takes cognizance as specified therein a process cannot be issued under this section.¹ A Magistrate taking cognizance on a complaint is the officer who has heard the complaint made He is the proper officer to issue a process because it is he who can best exercise a discretion with regard to the prima facie merits of the complaint² But a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under S 192 obtains complete seisin over the case and steps into the shoes of the transferring Magistrate So a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under S 192 is covered by the expression 'Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence' in this section and can issue process for compelling the attendance of the accused person³ (see also S 190 Note 8) As it is only the Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence that can issue process under this section a District or superior Magistrate cannot order process to issue when a joint or subordinate Magistrate to whom a case has been made over for disposal⁴ or who has taken cognizance of the complaint⁵ has failed or refused to issue process If he wants to do so he must remove the case to his own file and then issue process

Under this section a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under s 192 after the examination of the complainant can issue process though he has not himself examined the complainant⁶

Although it is only the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the offence who may direct issue of a process a Magistrate who is the presiding officer within the meaning of ss. 68 and 75 may sign the process, even if he may not have taken cognizance of the offence and directed issue of the process⁷

4 The Magistrate must have taken cognizance of an offence — It is only a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence that can issue a process under this section. Where therefore, no offence has been committed but the Magistrate gets information as to the possibility of an offence being committed, the matter is only one for the interference of the police, and not one for the Magistrate to issue process¹

If, on a complaint, it should appear to the Court that the act imputed amounted to an offence under the Indian Penal Code or any other penal law in force it is the duty of the Court to proceed with the matter². But where the acts as alleged do not disclose any offence it will be an abuse of the process of the Court to allow criminal proceedings to proceed³

An application for maintenance under s 498 is not a complaint in respect of any offence and therefore, a Magistrate dealing with it cannot dismiss it under sub-s. (3) of this section⁴

Even where an offence is disclosed there must be definite evidence of an offence within the local jurisdiction of the Magistrate receiving the complaint⁵. The Court is not limited to the sections or offences mentioned in the complaint. The fact that the complainant did not specifically and in terms accuse any one under any section of the Penal Code does not matter, if the facts stated in the complaint and his sworn statement constitute an offence triable by the Magistrate who receives the complaint⁶

Where on the receipt of a complaint the police start investigation and arrest a person and on investigation report to the Magistrate that no offence has been disclosed and the Magistrate discharges the person, the order of discharge has been held to be one after taking cognizance⁷. It is not clear how a Magistrate can be said to take cognizance of an offence in such a case. He really decides not to take cognizance of the offence.

5 "Sufficient ground for proceeding"—A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence is bound to issue process under this section only if, in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding¹ The stage at which the sufficiency of the ground for proceeding is to be considered is, in the case of a complaint, after the examination of the complainant under S 200² If the facts alleged in the complaint and the complainant's statement show a sufficient ground for proceeding, process should issue,³ otherwise not⁴ It is not necessary in all cases that before issuing process the Magistrate should have held any inquiry⁵

If a Magistrate is satisfied on the police report that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding and the accused is under arrest, the accused must be discharged and if he is on bail the bail bond must be cancelled This is the only course open to the Magistrate though the Code does not provide what is to happen in such a case⁶

A prima facie case means that there is sufficient ground for proceeding⁷ Where, therefore, a prima facie case is made out, the Magistrate should issue process⁸ even if he considers that a civil remedy is more appropriate⁹ It was, however, held in the under mentioned case¹⁰ that even if there was a prima facie case the Magistrate may in his discretion refuse to issue process

There cannot be said to be sufficient grounds in the following cases for issue of process

- (1) Where the complaint is made on information and not on personal knowledge¹¹ In such cases the Court should satisfy itself on inquiry that there is a case for the issue of process¹²
- (2) Where the allegations made in the complaint are not substantiated by the statement on oath¹³
- (3) Where the allegations disclose a dispute purely of a civil nature¹⁴

The following are not sufficient grounds for refusing issue of process

- (a) Where a prima facie case is made out but in the Magistrate's opinion there is no chance of conviction and no useful purpose will be served by the enquiry¹⁵
- (b) Avoidance of religious ill feeling¹⁶
- (c) The fact that the offence is cognizable by the police in the first instance¹⁷
- (d) The fact that the Magistrate thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in a conviction, though the fact that another person accused upon the same facts for the same offence has been acquitted may properly be taken into

If the Magistrate issues a warrant in a case in which he ought to have issued summons the error is not a ground for setting aside the proceedings⁴ The Magistrate in such cases can cancel the warrant and issue a summons⁵

Process should ordinarily issue against all the accused who are prima facie shown to have committed an offence⁶ But the Magistrate is not bound when the police report discloses one offender only, to issue process against any witnesses who may afterwards be found during trial to be accomplices.⁷ Nor is it imperative on him to proceed against a person who has been removed from the array of accused persons and is produced as a witness in the Court his failure to do so not being sufficient to invalidate the trial in respect of the other accused⁸

It has been held that in proper cases there is nothing irregular or improper in a Magistrate first issuing process for one accused person and then changing his mind and issuing process for all the accused.⁹

When once the Magistrate issues process under this section, proceeding commences and it should go on in due course unless something occurs to show that the Magistrate has, for some cause or other, made a wrong exercise of his discretion.¹⁰ The question of commencement of proceedings becomes relevant in suits for damages for malicious prosecution or for prosecution for making false complaint, etc. Prosecution commences when proceedings commence under this section and proceedings commence when process is issued against the accused. So unless process is issued, there is no cause of action in either of the proceedings referred to above.¹¹ The view that a prosecution commences even when a complaint is made¹² is, it is submitted, not well founded and is not an accepted one.

In police cases, where the accused is under arrest, the order of the Magistrate to produce the accused from custody on a particular date to stand his trial corresponds to the order for issue of process under this section and it is such an order which marks the commencement of proceedings against the accused. This is the point at which vested rights, such as a right of appeal or right of trial by jury may accrue to him if the law as it stands at that date gives them to him.¹³

Where A and B are jointly accused of an offence but the Magistrate issues process only against A, B is competent to give evidence as a witness at the trial of A.¹⁴

It has been held by the Patna High Court in the case cited below¹⁵ that an order by a Magistrate to the police to charge sheet a person may be treated as a warrant under this section. See also S 190, Note 22

8 Omission to issue process — Where a Magistrate without issuing any process at all to the accused convicts him, the conviction is illegal¹ But where the accused appears in Court of his own accord without a summons, he is entitled to require that the case be proceeded with and the mere omission to issue summons becomes immaterial in such a case²

9 Notice, if a "process" — A mere notice to the person complained against that a preliminary enquiry will be held does not amount to a summons. The issue of such a notice is neither contemplated by the Code nor included in the forms in schedule V¹

10 Order directing summons, if a judgment — An order directing issue of summons under this section is not a judgment. So where a Magistrate issued summons to an accused and the accused appeared and filed a cross complaint it was held that it was open to the Magistrate to rescind the order as to summons and send the complaints for enquiry under S 202¹

11 Order directing summons, if can be recalled — An order issuing summons under this section not being a judgment within the provisions of S 369 there is nothing in the Code which forbids the Magistrate to reconsider such order on sufficient ground and recall the summons¹

12 "If he has not jurisdiction himself" — A process is for attendance of the accused before the Magistrate issuing it but there are cases where the Magistrate issuing process has no jurisdiction to try the case as for example under S 29A in cases of complaint against an European British subject. Provision is made here for the attendance of the accused in such cases before another Magistrate having jurisdiction

13 "Some other Magistrate having jurisdiction" — This expression means some other Magistrate having jurisdiction to enquire into and try the case, the power to take cognizance being distinct from jurisdiction. Such Magistrate cannot rescind the original process, but he can discharge the accused in respect of the offence for which the process was issued and issue a fresh process for any other offence alleged to have been committed.¹

14 'Provisions of Section 90' — Sub section (2) — See Notes on Section 90

15 Process fee — Sub section (3) is new and enables a Magistrate to dismiss a case for default of payment of such fees for process as are payable and ordered, within a reasonable time. An order acquitting the accused is not correct.² Even before this provision was inserted there existed the practice of dismissing the complaint for non payment of process fees as for default of prosecution³ though such a dismissal was held to be illegal in warrant cases.⁴ The Legislature has given effect to that practice by the addition of this sub section.

Where a complaint is against two persons but the complainant has paid process fees for summons against one only, the other must be discharged under this sub-section, if no summons is taken against him.⁵

The process-fees referred to in this sub section are only for the attendance of the accused at the commencement of proceedings and not for the presence of the accused on the date of judgment and a dismissal of the complaint under this sub section for non payment of process-fees for such summons is not legal.⁶

The section applies to Magistrates taking cognizance of offences and this rule as to payment of process fees refers therefore only to cases when an 'offence' is disclosed. An application for maintenance under S 488 should not be dismissed under this sub section for failure to pay process-fees, as an order for maintenance is not a conviction for an offence.⁶

Where a complaint was dismissed under this sub section in a de novo trial after charges had already been framed, it was held that it amounted merely to a discharge and not an acquittal, and that a second trial on the same facts would not be barred.⁷ See for further discussion, Section 403.

Where a complaint is dismissed under this sub section, the High Court, Sessions

Judge or District Magistrate may under s 436 direct a further enquiry⁸ and in such a case notice to show cause why a further enquiry should not be ordered is neither desirable nor necessary⁹

As to the fees payable see A I R Commentaries on the Court fees Act 1st (1914) Edn., s 90 and also the Appendix for rules framed by the High Courts

As to the applicability of this sub section to processes to witnesses, see Notes on Section 544

16 Revision — The High Court has ample revisional powers to interfere with the proceedings under this section and can exercise its powers at any stage of the proceedings and quash the same though it will interfere only in cases of an exceptional nature as where neither the complaint nor the prosecution disclosed a case against the accused, but process has been issued under this section.¹

Where a Magistrate having followed the procedure laid down, has exercised a discretion judicially in issuing a process² or where the error, omission or irregularity in the issue of process is one which is curable under s 537³ the High Court will not interfere. Similarly where the record does not disclose sufficient grounds for issuing process the High Court will not interfere merely because the Magistrate, taking cognizance of the matter has failed to record reasons for not issuing process⁴

Changes introduced in 1872 —

Under the Code of 1861, it was doubtful whether the Court could dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in cases in which a warrant was ordinarily issuable on complaint. Section 151 of the Code of 1872 made it clear that the Court could do so in cases of whatever nature, in which the Magistrate thinks fit to issue a summons "

Changes introduced in 1882 —

(1) The words 'in cases of whatever nature' of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words 'whenever . . . issues a summons'

(2) The words 'by his pleader' were substituted for the words 'by an agent duly authorized'. This is consequent on the definition of 'pleader' newly added to the Code of 1882 in Section 4 (1) (n). That definition included any person duly authorized

(3) The words 'and if necessary' provided were newly added

Code of 1898 — The section remains unchanged since 1882

2 Scope — The general principle of the Code is that an accused person cannot be proceeded against *ex parte*¹. This section provides an exception to this general rule by enacting that the Magistrate may dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in a particular class of cases, namely those in which he issues a summons. At any stage of the proceedings, however, the Magistrate enquiring into or trying the case can direct the personal attendance of the accused if his presence is found necessary.

This section applies only to Magistrates and not to Courts of Session or the High Court. But s 303 shows that the latter Courts have got similar power to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused². The High Court can also under its inherent powers

16 Revision — The High Court has ample revisional powers to interfere with the proceedings under this section and can exercise its powers at any stage of the proceedings and quash the same though it will interfere only in cases of an exceptional nature as where neither the complaint nor the prosecution disclosed a case against the accused, but process has been issued under this section¹

Where a Magistrate, having followed the procedure laid down, has exercised a discretion judicially in issuing a process² or where the error, omission, or irregularity in the issue of process is one which is curable under S 537,³ the High Court will not interfere. Similarly where the record does not disclose sufficient grounds for issuing process, the High Court will not interfere merely because the Magistrate, taking cognizance of the matter has failed to record reasons for not issuing process⁴

Dispensation with attendance of accused when incapable of remaining before the Court See Section 540A

No exemption when warrant is issued See Note 3

Record of reasons for refusing leave under the Section See Note 4

1. Legislative changes.Changes introduced in 1872 —

Under the Code of 1861, it was doubtful whether the Court could dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in cases in which a warrant was ordinarily issuable on complaint. Section 151 of the Code of 1872 made it clear that the Court could do so "in cases, of whatever nature, in which the Magistrate thinks fit to issue a summons"

Changes introduced in 1882 —

- (1) The words "in cases of whatever nature" of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words "whenever issues a summons"
- (2) The words "by his pleader" were substituted for the words "by an agent duly authorized". This is consequent on the definition of "pleader" newly added to the Code of 1882 in Section 4 (1) (n). That definition included any person duly authorized

Code of 1898 — The section remains unchanged since 1882.

2. Scope.— The general principle of the Code is that an accused person cannot be proceeded against *ex parte*¹. This section provides an exception to this general rule by enacting that the Magistrate may dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in a particular class of cases, namely those in which he issues a summons. At any stage of the proceedings, however, the Magistrate enquiring into, or trying the case can direct the personal attendance of the accused if his presence is found necessary.

This section applies only to Magistrates and not to Courts of Session or District Court. But s 353 shows that the latter Courts have got similar power to dispense with personal attendance of the accused². The High Court can also under its inherent powers recognized by S 501A, dispense with such attendance³ See also S 116 and S 540A

3. "Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons." — This section does not apply where a warrant has been issued¹ or the accused has been arrested without a warrant² Where, however, a summons has been issued in the first instance and thereafter the accused is brought in under a warrant of arrest, the section would apply³ A summons can under S. 204 be issued even in cases in which a warrant is ordinarily issuable, this section will apply even to such cases if a summons has been issued⁴ Even where a warrant has been issued, the Magistrate may cancel the warrant and issue a summons,⁵ or the accused having appeared before him, it may not be necessary for him to issue a summons for the appearance of the accused⁶ In both these cases also this section will apply All that is required under this section is that the Magistrate should consider that a summons is sufficient for the appearance of the accused in the case and if he is of that opinion he may then permit the accused to appear by pleader⁷

4. "Dispense with." — The words "may, if he sees reason so to do" show that the Magistrate has a discretion to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused or not as he thinks fit The discretion will, however, be used liberally especially in trivial cases such as a prosecution for a municipal offence,¹ or where the accused is a pardanashin lady,² or where the accused is too ill to attend Court³ In such cases if the permission is refused, reasons for such refusal should be recorded⁴

In considering the propriety of an order under this section, the Magistrate should always take into account whether there is any material before him to indicate that an offence has been committed by the accused and whether there is anything in the nature of a prima facie case⁵

A Magistrate can dispense with the personal attendance of the accused as often as he pleases.⁶

It is not necessary that there should be an express order dispensing with the personal attendance. But it is advisable that the fact should be noted in the records and not be left for implication, although omission to do so would only be an irregularity which will not justify interference in revision.⁷

5 Bond from the accused — Where the personal attendance of an accused is dispensed with a recognizance bond may be taken from him binding him to appear either in person or by pleader, and if the pleader neglects to attend when the case is called on, the bond may be forfeited and the accused made liable for the payment of the penalty. The bond cannot be taken from his pleader nor can his pleader be bound by such a bond to attend.¹

6 Pardanashin lady — Where a Magistrate issues a summons to a pardanashin woman who is accused of an offence, he should, as a general rule, dispense with her personal attendance and permit her to appear by pleader at least until such time as he has before him some legal and satisfactory evidence indicative of her having committed a breach of the law.² Such an order should not be refused merely because —

(1) the Magistrate thinks that she is not pardanashin,² or

(2) other women belonging to the same class that observed pardah had appeared in Court,³ or

(3) she is the daughter of a prostitute if she is married to a respectable husband in whose family women observe pardah.⁴

The Court will extend the privilege of pardah to women who, though not strictly observing pardah, are yet not accustomed generally to appear before the public.⁶ This section is one which should be freely utilised in Sind where so much prejudice exists against the appearance of females generally in public.⁶

As to the right of a pardanashin woman to be exempted from personal attendance—

- (1) where she is a complainant, see S 200, Note 12 and
- (2) where she is a witness, see ss 503 and 506.

7. "Permit him to appear by his pleader." — Although the personal attendance of the accused may be dispensed with under this section, it is essential that he should be represented by his pleader. The reason is that it is necessary that some one should be present at the trial to look after the interests of the accused, and the law considers that such interest will be completely safeguarded if his pleader is in attendance.¹

The words 'appear by pleader' in their ordinary acceptance mean "represent by pleader," that is, having a pleader to act and to plead.²

The appearance by a pleader involves the performance of all acts that devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial³ such as the following.

- (1) pleading guilty or not guilty under s 255 and in cases falling under ss 242 and 243,⁴
- (2) filing a written statement embodying the plea of the accused,⁵
- (3) making the necessary answers to an examination under s 342,⁶
- (4) hearing a deposition of a witness read over, under s 360 (1),⁷
- (5) hearing of a judgment, the sentence being one of fine only or the accused being acquitted under s 366 (2).⁸

Form No 1 of schedule V of the Code shows that the summons to an accused person may itself direct whether the accused is to appear in person or by pleader. In other words, the Magistrate may, even at the time of issuing summons, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused and permit him to appear by pleader.⁹ When a summons is sent as in Form No 1 of schedule V, containing the words "you are hereby required to appear in person or by pleader" and the accused sends his pleader who requests for permission to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, the Magistrate cannot proceed against the accused for disobedience of the summons, even though he refuses to grant the permission. If he wants his personal attendance, an order directing such attendance should be made.¹⁰

The power to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused can be exercised by the Magistrate only so far as his own Court is concerned. He cannot, for instance, grant or refuse permission to appear through a pleader in the Sessions Court to which he commits the accused.¹¹

⁶ see Note 1, on p 54.

8 "Pleader."—Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, the Court could, when dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused, permit him to appear by an *agent duly authorized*¹ Under the present Code, the Court can permit him to appear only by his pleader But the definition of the word 'pleader' as now given in S 4 (1) (r), is very wide and includes *any person appointed by the accused with the permission of the Court to act in the proceedings against him*² In order that a person, other than a pleader authorized by law to practise in the Court, should be a 'pleader' within the meaning of S 4 (1) (r), it is necessary that—

- (1) he should have been appointed by the accused to act for him, and
- (2) the Court should permit him to so act

The appointment and the permission need not, however, be express but may be implied from the circumstances of the case³ Thus, where the father in law of the accused who was unwell appeared in Court on her behalf and the trying Magistrate thereupon proceeded with the case, it was assumed that the Magistrate must have given the necessary permission.⁴

It is, however, generally advisable that something should be noted on the record to show that the person who represents the accused has been duly appointed by him and the Court has given the requisite permission for his appearance in place of the accused⁵

In the absence of an appointment by the accused of any person to represent him, the mere permission of the Magistrate will not entitle any person to act as a pleader for the accused and the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to proceed with the case in the absence of the accused⁶

Illustrations

- (1) X, the estate agent of the accused appeared in Court and was permitted by the Magistrate to represent the accused It was, however, not clear that he was appointed by the accused to act for him in the proceeding It was held that the accused could not be convicted on the plea of "guilty" made by the agent⁷
- (2) The accused, a woman, was absent from her village and apparently without her knowledge, her mother in law appeared in Court on her behalf and was permitted to act for the accused It was held that the conviction was not sustainable⁸

9. Applicability to security proceedings.—This section applies to proceedings under S 106 in Chapter VIII Division A for the reason that the person against whom the proceedings are taken is an accused person But it does not apply to proceedings under Ss. 107 to 110, in Chapter VIII Division B,¹ inasmuch as in such proceedings the persons proceeded against are not accused persons But independently of this section, S 116 provides for dispensing with the personal attendance of the persons proceeded against in such cases

10. "At any stage of the proceedings"—Where the Court has allowed the accused to appear by pleader, but thinks it necessary or desirable that the accused should be present in person for any particular purpose, such as for examination by the Court under S 312 or for pleading to a charge under S 255, he may order the personal appearance of the accused¹ Where the accused is convicted and the sentence is not one of fine only, the Magistrate must, under s 306, sub s. (2), direct the personal attendance of the accused for hearing the judgment² Though at any time the Magistrate can revoke the permission given to the accused to appear by a pleader, yet he should not do so in a trivial case such as an income tax prosecution and on a trivial ground such as that the accused objects to the case being tried by that Magistrate and wants a transfer of his case to some other Magistrate³

11. Revision.—Where the Magistrate has refused to excuse the personal attendance of an accused person, the High Court will in proper cases interfere in revision and will dispense with his presence¹

The High Court will not, however, interfere where the irregularity alleged is the mere omission of the Magistrate to make a record that he has given permission to the accused to appear by his pleader,² or where the case itself is an extremely trivial one³

But where there is a complete absence of jurisdiction as where the Magistrate dispenses with the presence of the accused in a case in which a warrant has been issued, the High Court will set aside the order giving such permission⁴

A Sub divisional Magistrate cannot, in revision, cancel the order of a Bench Court dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused He can only forward the record to the District Magistrate who should, under S 438 of the Code, refer the matter to the High Court⁵

1 Chapter XVIII — General — Section 193 provides that a Sessions Court can take cognizance of a case in the exercise of its original jurisdiction only when the accused has been committed to it for trial. Section 191 provides that the High Court may take cognizance of offences upon commitment made to it. This chapter specifies the Magistrate who may pass orders of committal and prescribes the procedure to be followed in him for the purpose.

The inquiry prescribed by the chapter is called a preliminary inquiry, and before a Magistrate commits a case for trial to a Sessions Court, he must hold such a preliminary inquiry into the facts alleged against the accused¹ and satisfy himself that there is a real case for trial.²

The object of such an inquiry is two fold: firstly, in order to prevent the committal of cases in which there is no reasonable ground for conviction so as on the one hand, to save the accused from the prolonged anxiety of undergoing a trial for offences that cannot be brought home to him and on the other, to save the time of the Court being wasted over cases in which the evidence would obviously not justify a conviction.³ Secondly, in order to provide that no person shall be committed for trial without being previously made acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the offence imputed to him and without being given a fair opportunity of meeting them.⁴

2 Legislative changes.

- (1) The words "subject to the provisions of S. 443" which originally occurred at the beginning of sub s (1) of the section have been omitted by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 12 [XII] of 1923, in view of the amendment of S 443 effected by the said amending Act
- (2) The words "(not being a Magistrate of the third class)" were newly introduced into the section by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 18 [XVIII] of 1923

3. "Magistrates empowered in this behalf." — As the section now stands, the following Magistrates have powers of committal —

Presidency Magistrates, District Magistrates, Sub divisional Magistrates, Magistrates of the first class, and Magistrates of the second class, if they are specially empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf¹

Before the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 18 (XVIII) of 1923, even Magistrates of the third class could be empowered to commit and in Madras all Magistrates had been so empowered to commit² except Tahsildar Magistrates of Taluqs, where there were Stationary Sub Magistrates³ The introduction of the words "not being a Magistrate of the third class" shows that third class Magistrates cannot now be so empowered

The British Consul at Zanzibar is a Magistrate empowered to commit accused for trial to the High Court of Bombay⁴

A District or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom a sub Magistrate has submitted the case under S 349 has got the power to commit the case to the Court of Session,⁵ but he has no power to send the case back to the sub Magistrate with directions to commit it⁶ See also Notes 14 and 16 on section 349

A Magistrate having power to commit does not lose the power merely because he has been specially appointed to try the accused⁷

A Presidency Magistrate's jurisdiction to commit a case is not ousted by the fact that the coroner has held an inquiry and has drawn up an inquisition under Act 4 [IV] of 1871⁸

4 Effect of committal by Magistrate having no power of committal — See Section 532.

5. "May commit" — The procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII is not confined to cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session but is also applicable to cases which, in the opinion of the Magistrate, ought to be tried by such Court¹ In other words

(1) If the case is one exclusively triable by a Court of Session the Magistrate must proceed under this chapter and cannot try the case himself². And when the facts prima facie disclose such an offence the Magistrate should commit the case and will not be justified in trying the case for deciding whether it constitutes a lesser offence³.

(2) Conversely if the offence is not of a nature triable by a Court of Session at all, this chapter will not apply and the Magistrate must try the case himself⁴.

(3) If the offence is one triable both by a Court of Session and by himself, the Magistrate has a discretion to decide whether to try the case himself or to proceed under this chapter⁵. As to the proper exercise of discretion in such cases, see Note 4 on S 347.

Even in cases not triable by the Magistrate but triable by a Court of Session or by some other Magistrate, he has a discretion to decide whether to proceed under this chapter or to send the case for trial by the proper Magistrate⁶

If at the time a Magistrate is asked to take cognizance of a case, he is ab initio convinced that the case ought to be tried by a Court of Session, he must commence proceedings under this chapter. But there is nothing to prevent a Magistrate who started with the trial of a case from subsequently deciding to commit it for trial by a Sessions Court⁷. In such cases the proceedings need not be started afresh but the Magistrate may proceed from where he left and continue the enquiry under this chapter⁸.

6 "Triable by such Court"—Not only exclusively but also from the nature of the case. — It has been seen in Note 5 that in cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session the procedure prescribed by this chapter must be adopted and that in cases not so exclusively triable the Magistrate has a discretion to decide whether to proceed under this chapter or to try the case himself. In the latter class of cases, the Magistrate must proceed under this chapter if in his opinion, the case ought to be tried by a Court of Session¹. As to the principles on which this discretion ought to be exercised see Note 4 on Section 317.

7 Discretion in the matter of committing or discharging the accused—See Section 213

8 District Magistrate's interference with the discretion — When the inquiry is pending before a subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate has no power to order committal or otherwise interfere with the discretion of the former. See S 435 Note 13. But when a sub Magistrate has discharged the accused the District Magistrate, if satisfied that the discharge was improper, may interfere under S 436 and order committal. See Notes on Section 436 and Section 437.

9 Committal to Sessions Court having no local jurisdiction over the case — As to the validity of a committal to a Sessions Court having no local jurisdiction in the place where the offence was committed, see Section 531, Note ^o.

When a native Indian subject who is charged with having committed an offence in a Native State is brought to the British territory, he will be considered to have been 'found' at the place to which he is brought and the Sessions Court having jurisdiction in that place will be competent to try the offence¹.

1 Scope and applicability of the section — This section contemplates a commitment to the Court of Session or High Court in two cases (a) where the offence is exclusively triable by a Court of Session or High Court and (b) where the offence is triable by a Court of Session or High Court as well as by a Magistrate but the Magistrate is of the opinion that it ought to be tried by a Court of Session or High Court. Where an offence though triable by a Court of Session or High Court is neither exclusively triable by such Court nor one which in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court the Magistrate cannot commit it to the Sessions Court¹. Where an offence is not triable at all by a Court of Session it cannot be committed to the Sessions. See S 206

A preliminary inquiry as prescribed by this chapter is not necessary where a case is committed to the Court of Session in obedience to the lawful orders of a superior Court²

4 Procedure where there are two or more offences one of which is triable only by a Court of Session — Where an accused is charged with two or more offences one of which is exclusively triable or ought to be tried by a Court of Session, the procedure under this chapter should be followed and the proper course is to commit him for trial for all the offences¹ So also, where several persons are jointly charged in respect of one transaction and it appears from the facts implicating the whole of them that one has committed an aggravated offence, which must or should be tried by a Court of Session, the Magistrate should commit all the accused for trial²

5 Joint inquiry — Legality of — There is no provision in the Code requiring a separate inquiry in respect of each person prior to commitment The sections relating to joinder of charges 112 S 233 to S 233 refer to trials only Hence, there is no objection to hold a preliminary enquiry against a person jointly with others but the trial on commitment should be separate¹ See also S 233 Note 6 and S 233, Note 1

191. The complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution shall be examined in the presence of the accused person, or of his agent when his personal attendance is dispensed with and he appears by agent

Accused may cross-examine The accused person or his agent shall be permitted to examine and re-examine his own witnesses, and to cross-examine the complainant and his witnesses.

357. In inquiries preliminary to commitment to a Court of Session or High Court, the Magistrate shall procure the attendance of the witnesses for the prosecution as in cases usually tried upon warrant, and it shall be in his discretion to summon any witness offered on behalf of the accused person to answer or disprove the evidence against him. If the Magistrate refuses to summon a witness so offered, he shall record his reasons for such refusal.

Code of 1861 : Ss 186, 193, 194 and 207.

186. The Magistrate shall ascertain from the complainant, or otherwise, the names of any person

Examination of the complainant and witnesses for the prosecution

193. The Magistrate shall take the evidence of the complainant, and of such persons as are stated to have any knowledge of the facts which form the subject matter of the accusation and the attendant circumstances

The accused person or his agent shall be permitted to examine and re-examine his own witnesses, and to cross-examine the complainant and his witnesses.

Discretionary with the Magistrate to take evidence for the defence

207. It shall be at the discretion of the Magistrate to summon any witness who may be offered in behalf of the accused person to answer or disprove the evidence against him

2. Object of the section. — This section is intended for the benefit of the accused. Its object is that the accused should be made aware of all the evidence that he will have to meet on his trial and also that he should have a full opportunity of convincing the Magistrate that there are not sufficient grounds for committing him for trial¹

3. "When the accused appears or is brought before him" — It is necessary for a preliminary inquiry under this chapter that there must be an accused person. Where an inquiry was held in which a certain person was not put in the situation of an accused person at all but was himself examined on solemn affirmation like other witnesses, and was not given any opportunity of cross examining the other witnesses, and then was committed to the Court of Session on a charge which was the result of the inquiry, it was held that the commitment was illegal¹

The appearance of the accused under this section may be voluntary and need not be under any process issued against him under Section 204²

4. "Shall proceed to hear" — Under s 311, the Magistrate can postpone the commencement of the enquiry for any reasonable cause

5. "Hear the complainant (if any)" — The section requires that the complainant shall be heard, not necessarily examined¹

6. Take all such evidence — In an inquiry under this chapter the Magistrate is bound before he draws up a charge to take all such evidence as may be produced (1) in support of the prosecution, (2) on behalf of the accused or (3) as may be called for by the Magistrate¹ unless the evidence is irrelevant or unnecessary to prove the point in issue² It is the duty of the Magistrate to record the evidence fully in order that the accused may have ample notice of the matter with which he is charged and of the evidence by which the prosecutor seeks to prove the case³ He is not absolved from recording all the evidence produced under this section even in cases where the accused has confessed his guilt inasmuch as such confessions are often retracted later on⁴ It ought to be the endeavour of the Magistrate in the inquiry under this section to ascertain the fact of a particular offence and collect evidence thereof before commitment and not to expect convictions at the Court of Session on a vague and multifarious evidence causing suspicion of several offences but yielding proof of none⁵ As to whether the inquiry should be directed to

7. Evidence for the prosecution — The object of the prosecution is not to secure a conviction at any cost but to see that justice is done. Hence it is the duty of the prosecution to call as witnesses all persons who have been eyewitnesses or otherwise connected with the transaction although the evidence of any of them may be favourable to the accused and an adverse inference can be drawn from the failure to call any material witness.¹ But the prosecution is not under any duty to call witnesses whom it regards as false or unnecessary.² If the prosecution has not sent up any material witness, it is the duty of the Magistrate to call such witness and examine him himself.³ The examination of the investigating police officer is necessary in all important cases, especially of murder and dacoity.⁴ accused to produce evidence a commitment order passed without examining the defence witnesses cannot be quashed on the ground of any irregularity or illegality.² It has been held in the undermentioned case³ that the rule laid down in this section is limited to examination of witnesses produced by the defence and should not be enlarged to include witnesses whom the accused might be prepared to produce.

9. "In manner hereinafter provided"—These words refer to Chapter XX⁴

10 Sub section (2) — Right of cross-examination. — Section 191 of the Code of 1861 and s 191 of the Code of 1872 expressly declared the right of the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses before commitment.⁵ The 1892 Code omitted this provision as a redundancy, since even under s 128 of the Evidence Act, 1872, which provides that the opposite party has the right to cross examine the witnesses examined by a party the accused can cross examine the prosecution witnesses. But this omission gave room for doubts⁶ to remove which sub s (2) was inserted in 1898. The accused is now, of right, entitled to cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution during the preliminary enquiry before the charge is framed.⁷ The refusal or omission of the Magistrate to give the accused an opportunity to cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution is a legal flaw and will render the order of commitment liable to be set aside⁸ unless the accused has reserved the cross-examination to the Sessions Court.⁹

The proper time to exercise the right of cross examination is after the examination in chief of each witness. The accused has no right to reserve his cross examination till the examination in chief of all the prosecution witnesses is over.¹⁰ But the Magistrate has a discretion in the exercise of his inherent power in suitable circumstances to allow the accused to reserve his cross-examination⁷

If the Magistrate in the exercise of his discretion, permits the reservation of cross-examination, he cannot then refuse to recall the prosecution witnesses⁸. Thus, where the accused applies for copies of statements made by prosecution witnesses to the police during the investigation with a view to cross-examine the witnesses and the Magistrate has ordered such copies to be furnished under S 162 he is bound to postpone the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses till such copies are obtained and then allow cross-examination with reference to such statements⁹.

A Magistrate has no power to curtail the cross-examination of witnesses, by directing the counsel for the accused not to put more than six to eight questions to each witness¹⁰. The cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under this section need not be confined to matters elicited in examination in chief¹¹. This sub-section speaks of the right of the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. But the Magistrate himself can cross-examine them if he thinks it necessary to do so for ascertaining the truth of the prosecution story¹² (vide Section 165, Evidence Act).

As to whether the accused is entitled to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed, see Note 7 on S 213.

As to the right of the accused to cross-examine in cases commenced as trials but subsequently considered by Magistrate to be fit to be committed to sessions, see S 347, Note 5.

11 Sub-section (3) — Summoning of witnesses. — Under this sub-section, the Magistrate is bound to issue process for the attendance of any witness or the production of any document when such process is applied for, either by the prosecution or the accused¹ unless he deems it unnecessary to do so². If he refuses to issue process, he must record his reasons for his refusal and an omission to record such reasons is an illegality and the subsequent order, either of discharge, or of commitment is liable to be set aside³. Inordinate delay in applying for summons is a proper reason to refuse process⁴. So also, if it is brought to the notice of the Magistrate that the witnesses were summoned for the purpose of causing vexation to those witnesses, the Magistrate can refuse to issue summons⁵. But the Magistrate should not refuse to call evidence on behalf of the accused merely because he will have ample opportunity to produce evidence later on, when he is committed to the

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

- (1) The words 'or High Court' were added after the words 'Court of Session' in the Code of 1872
- (2) If the Magistrate should hold that the accused person should be tried before himself, the Code of 1861 provided that he should proceed under chapter XIV thereof which related to the procedure to be followed in the trial of warrant cases, but the Code of 1872 provided that in such circumstances the Magistrate should proceed under chapters XVI, XVII or XVIII thereof (which laid down the procedure for the trial of summons cases and warrant cases and for summary trials respectively)
- (3) Three explanations were added to the section in the Code of 1872. Explanation I provided that except in compoundable cases, the absence of the complainant was not in itself a sufficient ground of discharge. Explanation II provided that a discharge was not equivalent to an acquittal and did not bar the revival of a prosecution for the same offence. Explanation III provided that an order of discharge could not be made until the evidence of all the witnesses named for the prosecution had been taken.

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) The words relating to the taking of evidence referred to in Section 203 and the examination of the accused were added at the beginning of the section
- (2) The words 'before the Court of Session or High Court or for remanding him' which occurred after the words 'for committing the accused person to take his trial' in the Code of 1872 were omitted
- (3) The words 'or some other Magistrate' after the word 'himself' were added in the Code of 1882
- (4) The three explanations to the section referred to above which occurred in the Code of 1872 were omitted
- (5) The second paragraph to the section providing for the discharge of the accused before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution and the defence was added

1. Legislative changes

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

- (1) The words "or High Court" were added after the words "Court of Session" in the Code of 1872
- (2) If the Magistrate should hold that the accused person should be tried before himself, the Code of 1861 provided that he should proceed under Chapter XIV thereof which related to the procedure to be followed in the trial of warrant cases, but the Code of 1872 provided that in such circumstances the Magistrate should proceed under Chapters XVI, XVII or XVIII thereof (which laid down the procedure for the trial of summons cases and warrant cases and for summary trials respectively)
- (3) Three explanations were added to the section in the Code of 1872 Explanation I provided that, except in compoundable cases, the absence of the complainant was not in itself a sufficient ground of discharge Explanation II provided that a discharge was not equivalent to an acquittal and did not bar the revival of a prosecution for the same offence Explanation III provided that an order of discharge could not be made until the evidence of all the witnesses named for the prosecution had been taken

- (1) The words relating to the taking of evidence referred to in Section 208 and the examination of the accused were added at the beginning of the section
- (2) The words "before the Court of Session or High Court or for remanding him" which occurred after the words "for committing the accused person to take his trial" in the Code of 1872 were omitted
- (3) The words "or some other Magistrate" after the word "himself" were added in the Code of 1882
- (4) The three explanations to the section referred to above which occurred in the Code of 1872 were omitted
- (5) The second paragraph to the section providing for the discharge of the accused before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution and the defence, was added

Changes made in 1898 —

- (1) The words 'if necessary' were added after the words 'he has' and before the words 'examined the accused'
- (2) The words requiring reasons to be recorded for an order of discharge under sub section (1) were added

2 Scope of the section — This section specifies the procedure to be adopted where after the evidence referred to in s 208 has been taken, the Magistrate finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused. Where there are sufficient grounds a charge should be framed under s 210. There may be a further examination of witnesses after the charge is framed (ss 211 and 212), and, if the Magistrate is satisfied after such examination that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the Court of Session he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused (s 213, sub s. (2)).

The provisions of this section may be compared with those of s 253 which deals with the discharge of an accused person in the trial of warrant cases. The following are the chief points of distinction between the two sections

- (1) The ground of discharge under this section is that the Magistrate holds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, under s 253 the ground of discharge is that the Magistrate holds that no case has been made out against the accused which, if un rebutted, would warrant his conviction.
- (2) The order of discharge under this section is passed after the evidence for the prosecution as well as that for the defence has been taken while under s 253 the order of discharge is passed before the evidence for the defence is taken
- (3) Under sub s (2) of s 209, as well as of s 253 the Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the whole of the evidence referred to in sub s (1) of the respective sections has been taken. But under s 209 the Magistrate must record the reasons whether the order of discharge is under sub s (1) or under sub s (2), while under s 253 no reasons need be recorded for an order of discharge under sub s (1) though reasons have to be recorded in case of discharge under sub s (2)
- (4) There is no provision in the trial of warrant cases for cancelling a charge once framed and for discharging the accused. There is such a provision in the case of preliminary enquiries in sessions cases (s 213)

3 "When the evidence referred to in section 208, sub sections (1) and (3), has been taken" — Except in cases coming under sub s (2) the Magistrate must hear all the evidence referred to in s 208 sub ss (1) and (3) before he can consider whether there are, or are not sufficient grounds for commitment¹. Such evidence includes evidence both for the prosecution as well as the defence and, hence it is not open to a Magistrate merely on the evidence for the prosecution and before he has taken the evidence for the defence, to consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused.² The contrary view³ though tenable under the Codes of 1872 and 1861⁴ cannot be considered good law under the present Code in view of the express language of this section.

Under sub s. (3) of S 208, if the prosecution or the accused applies to the Magistrate to issue summons for the attendance of any witnesses whose evidence may be desired, it is open to the Magistrate to refuse the application if he thinks fit to do so. This section by requiring the Magistrate to take the evidence referred to in sub s. (3) of S 208 before considering if there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused does not deprive him of the discretion he has under that sub-section to refuse to summon any witness whom a party may desire to summon.⁵

Although it is open to an accused to insist on giving his evidence before the Magistrate frames a charge against him or decides to discharge him yet an accused is not bound to tender any evidence in the preliminary inquiry and his refusal to produce any evidence in such inquiry cannot give rise to any adverse inference against him.⁶

Sub-section (2) expressly reserves the power of the Magistrate to discharge an accused person even before he has taken any evidence, if he finds that the charge is groundless. See Note 12.

4 Examination of the accused — See S 342 and Notes thereon.

5 Sufficient grounds for committing the accused — In commitment proceedings what the Magistrate has to see is whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment and not whether there are sufficient grounds for conviction. Hence where there is a prima facie case for commitment the Magistrate is bound to commit the accused and is not empowered to enter into nice questions of the probabilities of the case and discharge the accused on the ground that in his opinion the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a conviction.¹ But in order to satisfy himself that there are sufficient grounds for (Magistrate in preliminary inquiry of dacoity case discharging accused as no prima facie case was made

6 "Shall discharge him" — It has been seen in Note 5 that when the Magistrate finds that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused, he is bound to discharge him. Hence where in a proceeding against A some of the witnesses say that the offence was committed by B the Magistrate should not suspend the proceeding against A and go on with the case against B with a view to commit either the one or the other of them. The Magistrate should go on with the inquiry against A and proceeding should not be started against B until A is either convicted, acquitted or discharged.¹

It has been held that an order of discharge may be presumed to have been made though there is no formal order on the record.² Similarly it has been held that where a person is charged with a major offence and the Magistrate finding that such a charge does not lie frames a charge for a minor offence and proceeds on the basis of such charge his proceeding amounts to a discharge of the accused with reference to the major offence so as to enable a Court of revision to direct a further inquiry or a commitment to the sessions.³ But where the prosecution did not press for a charge being framed for a major offence the mere fact that the accused has been charged with a minor offence does not mean that he has been discharged in respect of the major offence.⁴

7. Effect of order of discharge — An order of discharge does not operate as an acquittal and does not bar a fresh trial of the accused for the same offence (S 403). But the person discharged is no longer an accused person and the disqualification of an accused person to give evidence in his own case does not attach to him.¹ A discharge is also such a termination of a prosecution as would entitle the discharged person to maintain an action for damages for malicious prosecution.²

8 Power of Magistrate to award compensation to accused on discharge — See S 250 and Notes thereon

9 Recording reasons for discharge — The Magistrate must record his reasons when he discharges an accused person under this section.¹ But he need not record a formal judgment as laid down in S 367.² Where there are several accused and different accused are discharged at different stages of the inquiry it is enough if the reasons for their discharge are recorded at the end of the inquiry.³

10 Order by superior Court for further inquiry or commitment to sessions—See Ss 433 to 439 and Notes thereon

11. "Unless it appears . . . accordingly."—Where there are not sufficient grounds for commitment, the Magistrate may, in proper cases, try the case himself or send it to any other Magistrate for trial instead of discharging the accused¹ But where there are good grounds for commitment the Magistrate is bound to frame a charge and commit the case to the Court of Session. He has no power in such cases to send the case to a Magistrate with special powers under S 30, although such specially empowered Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try the offence² A Magistrate should not treat a grave offence beyond his jurisdiction as a less grave offence in order to bring it within his jurisdiction³

12 Sub-section (2) — Discharge without completing inquiry where charge is groundless—Section 195 of the Code of 1872 expressly forbade a Magistrate in a preliminary inquiry under this chapter to discharge an accused person before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution. This provision has been omitted in the later Codes and sub s (2) has been added which expressly permits the Magistrate to discharge an accused person at any stage of the inquiry if he finds that the charge is groundless although he has not fully taken the evidence either for the prosecution or for the accused¹ Thus, when the account given by the prosecutor himself, of a transaction is of such a nature as to deprive it of a criminal character, the Magistrate is justified in concluding that the charge is groundless and in discharging the accused immediately without proceeding further with the inquiry² But an order of discharge under this sub-section can only be passed by a Magistrate who is legally seized of the case. Thus, where

10 Order by superior Court for further inquiry or commitment to sessions — See Ss 433 to 439 and Notes thereon.

11. "Unless it appears . . . accordingly." — Where there are not sufficient grounds for commitment the Magistrate may, in proper cases, try the case himself or send it to any other Magistrate for trial instead of discharging the accused¹ But where there are good grounds for commitment the Magistrate is bound to frame a charge and commit the case to the Court of Session. He has no power in such cases to send the case to a Magistrate with special powers under S 30, although such specially empowered Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try the offence² A Magistrate should not treat a grave offence beyond his jurisdiction as a less grave offence in order to bring it within his jurisdiction³

12 Sub-section (2) — Discharge without completing inquiry where charge is groundless — Section 195 of the Code of 1872 expressly forbade a Magistrate in a preliminary inquiry under this chapter to discharge an accused person before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution. This provision has been omitted in the later Codes and sub s (2) has been added which expressly permits the Magistrate to discharge an accused person at any stage of the inquiry if he finds that the charge is groundless although he has not fully taken the evidence either for the prosecution or for the accused¹ Thus when the account given by the prosecutor himself of a transaction is of such a nature as to deprive it of a criminal character, the Magistrate is justified in concluding that the charge is groundless and in discharging the accused immediately without proceeding further with the inquiry² But an order of discharge under this sub-section can only be passed by a Magistrate who is legally seized of the case. Thus where

11. "Unless it appears . . . accordingly." — Where there are not sufficient grounds for commitment the Magistrate may in proper cases try the case himself or send it to any other Magistrate for trial instead of discharging the accused¹ But where there are good grounds for commitment the Magistrate is bound to frame a charge and commit the case to the Court of Session He has no power in such cases to send the case to a Magistrate with special powers under S 80, although such specially empowered Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try the offence² A Magistrate should not treat a grave offence beyond his jurisdiction as a less grave offence in order to bring it within his jurisdiction³

12 Sub section (2) — Discharge without completing inquiry where charge is groundless — Section 195 of the Code of 1872 expressly forbade a Magistrate in a preliminary inquiry under this chapter to discharge an accused person before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution. This provision has been omitted in the later Codes and sub s (2) has been added which expressly permits the Magistrate to discharge an accused person at any stage of the inquiry if he finds that the charge is groundless although he has not fully taken the evidence either for the prosecution or for the accused¹ Thus when the account given by the prosecutor himself of a transaction is of such a nature as to deprive it of a criminal character the Magistrate is justified in concluding that the charge is groundless and in discharging the accused immediately without proceeding further with the inquiry² But an order of discharge under this sub section can only be passed by a Magistrate who is legally seized of the case Thus where

1. Legislative changes (S 210 and S. 213)

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

Referring to the circumstances under which a case could be committed to the sessions S 226 of the Code of 1861 used the words 'when evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to be sufficient for the conviction of the accused' whereas the words used in S 196 of the Code of 1872 were 'when evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to justify him in sending the accused person to take his trial'

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) The opening words of the section were added in order to make it clear that the Magistrate must consider the evidence for the accused also before determining the question whether he should discharge the accused or whether he should frame a charge against him
- (2) The provision for the supply of a translation of the charge to the accused which occurred in the prior Code (S 199) was omitted
- (3) The provision that the supply of a copy of the charge to the accused should be free of cost was new
- (4) The Code of 1872 provided that the order for commitment should be made in the charge itself (S 198 of the Code) whereas the Code of 1882 provided for a separate order of commitment (S 213)

Changes made in 1898 —

Sub section (2) to S 213 was newly added providing for the cancellation of a charge already framed by the Magistrate and the discharge of the accused even after a charge was framed against him

Changes made after 1898 —

The words 'such charge' in sub s (2) of S 210 were substituted for the words 'the charge' by S 53 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 1923 (18 [XVIII] of 1923)

2 Scope of the section — Section 209 lays down when an accused person may be discharged in commitment proceedings. This section provides for the framing of a charge in such proceedings. A charge under this section should be framed only if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are good grounds for commitment. But the mere framing of a charge does not by itself amount to a commitment which should be made by a separate order under S 213¹. It may also be noted that the order of commitment under S 213 cannot be made immediately on a charge being framed, or simultaneously with it² without anything further being done. There is a further procedure to be followed

3 "When, upon such evidence being taken" — This expression refers to the evidence mentioned in S 205 sub ss. (1) and (3)¹ The section requires that the Magistrate should consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the sessions, only after such evidence has been taken Hence the Magistrate has no power to frame a charge under this section until he has taken all the evidence which the accused may desire to produce² But this does not mean that a Magistrate is bound to summon any witness that a party may desire to call under sub s (3) of S 208 the Magistrate has a discretion to refuse an application for summons to any witness³ Similarly the Magistrate need not go on recording evidence when it is unnecessary to do so Thus when the evidence already let in by the prosecution is sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the accused the Magistrate is not bound to take the rest of the prosecution evidence also⁴ Section 205 sub s (1) empowers the Magistrate to call for any evidence that he may consider necessary and it is open to him to call witnesses himself and take their evidence for the purpose of finding out if the case is a fit one for committal to the sessions⁵

4 Examination of the accused — See Section 349 and Notes thereon

5 Is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused" — A charge must be framed under this section only on the Magistrate being satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for commitment¹ As to what are sufficient grounds for commitment see Notes on S 209 and the undermentioned cases² An accused cannot be committed to the sessions on a charge that he is liable by reason of a previous conviction to an enhanced punishment under S 75 Penal Code unless there is prima facie evidence on the record to prove the previous conviction³

1. Legislative changes (S. 210 and S. 213)

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

Referring to the circumstances under which a case could be committed to the sessions, S 226 of the Code of 1861 used the words "when evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to be sufficient for the conviction of the accused" whereas the words used in S 196 of the Code of 1872 were "when evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to justify him in sending the accused person to take his trial . . ."

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) The opening words of the section were added in order to make it clear that the Magistrate must consider the evidence for the accused also before determining the question whether he should discharge the accused or whether he should frame a charge against him
- (2) The provision for the supply of a translation of the charge to the accused, which occurred in the prior Code (S 199), was omitted
- (3) The provision that the supply of a copy of the charge to the accused should be free of cost was new
- (4) The Code of 1872 provided that the order for commitment should be made in the charge itself (S 198 of the Code) whereas the Code of 1882 provided for a separate order of commitment (S 213)

Changes made in 1898 —

Sub section (2) to S 213 was newly added providing for the cancellation of a charge already framed by the Magistrate and the discharge of the accused even after a charge was framed against him

Changes made after 1898 —

The words "such charge" in subs (2) of S 210 were substituted for the words "the charge" by S 53 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1923 (18 [XVIII] of 1923)

2 Scope of the section — Section 209 lays down when an accused person may be discharged in commitment proceedings. This section provides for the framing of a charge in such proceedings. A charge under this section should be framed only if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are good grounds for commitment. But the mere framing of a charge does not, by itself, amount to a commitment, which should be made by a separate order under S 213¹. It may also be noted that the order of commitment under S 213 cannot be made immediately on a charge being framed, or simultaneously with it² without anything further being done. There is a further procedure to be followed under Ss 211 to 213 before an order of commitment can be made. Moreover, it is open to a Magistrate to take further evidence after the charge is framed and if upon such evidence being taken, he finds there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused, he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused³. It is also open to a Magistrate to amend the charge after it is framed and proceed to try the case himself instead of committing it to the sessions.⁴

3 "When, upon such evidence being taken" — This expression refers to the evidence mentioned in S 203, sub ss (1) and (3)¹. The section requires that the Magistrate should consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the sessions, only after such evidence has been taken. Hence, the Magistrate has no power to frame a charge under this section until he has taken all the evidence which the accused may desire to produce². But this does not mean that a Magistrate is bound to summon any witness that a party may desire to call under sub s (3) of S 203 the Magistrate has a discretion to refuse an application for summons to any witness³. Similarly, the Magistrate need not go on recording evidence when it is unnecessary to do so. Thus, when the evidence already let in by the prosecution is sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the accused the Magistrate is not bound to take the rest of the prosecution evidence also⁴. Section 203 sub s (1) empowers the Magistrate to call for any evidence that he may consider necessary and it is open to him to call witnesses himself and take their evidence for the purpose of finding out if the case is a fit one for committal to the sessions⁵.

As to the power of a Magistrate to frame a charge on the basis of evidence recorded by another Magistrate, see Notes on Section 350

See also Notes on Sections 203 and 209

4 Examination of the accused — See Section 342 and Notes thereon

5 "Is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused" — A charge must be framed under this section only on the Magistrate being satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for commitment¹. As to what are sufficient grounds for commitment, see Notes on S 209 and the undermentioned cases². An accused cannot be committed to the sessions on a charge that he is liable by reason of a previous conviction to an enhanced punishment under S 75 Penal Code, unless there is prima facie evidence on the record to prove the previous conviction³.

6 'He shall frame a charge' — The task of framing a charge is the duty of the Magistrate and not of the prosecutor¹ The Magistrate must base the charge on the materials before him and not merely on the allegations of the complainant or prosecutor. He may frame a charge for any offence disclosed on the evidence though it may be different from that mentioned in the complaint² In framing a charge the Magistrate must confine his attention to the question as to what offence is disclosed on the materials before him and should not be influenced by any considerations as to what would be the effect of framing a charge for a particular offence³ Further, the Magistrate should be careful not to mention anything in the charge in a form which is not justified by the materials before him⁴

Though a Magistrate is at liberty to frame a charge for any offence disclosed on the materials before him he cannot frame a charge which would amount to his prejudging the case which has to be tried by another Court. Thus where an accused was charged with the offence of wrongful confinement and he raised the defence that he had lawful excuse for his act because the person confined was caught in his house under circumstances which led to the belief that he had committed house breaking by night and the Magistrate committed the accused not only for wrongful confinement but disbelieving the defence, also for fabricating false evidence and making a false charge it was held that the commitment in respect of the two last charges was illegal inasmuch as in putting the accused on his trial on such charges the Magistrate was really prejudging the defence which the accused had raised to the first charge⁵

Where under S 423 the appellate Court directs a Magistrate to commit the accused for trial before the Court of Session the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make further enquiry and the enquiry already held is sufficient for the purposes of this chapter. The Magistrate has then to frame a charge under this section and to proceed under Ss 211 and 213 to commit the accused⁶ See also Section 423 Note 30

1a. Object of the section — The purpose of this section is merely that executive authorities should be able to compel the attendance of such witnesses as the accused wishes to be summoned in order that when the trial of the case comes on in the Sessions Court the case may be heard from day to day and no time should be wasted. Under s 291 the accused can examine witnesses who are present in Court although they were not previously named by him¹

1. "The accused shall be required" — After the charge framed against the accused has been read and explained to him under s 210 sub s (2) the Magistrate is bound under this section to require the accused to give in a list of witnesses if any, whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial in the Court of Session¹. The accused must be clearly and specifically asked for a list of witnesses. It is not enough to put the question 'Have you any evidence?' Such a question is ambiguous and might suggest to the accused, only an inquiry as to whether he has witnesses ready in Court².

The language of the section is imperative and a failure to ask an accused person to give in his list of witnesses will render his conviction liable to be quashed even though he has been tried along with others who had been so asked³

It is also necessary that the names of witnesses for the defence must appear on the record. Where a Magistrate omits to enter the names of witnesses for the defence on the record and the omission is brought to the notice of the Sessions Judge, he ought not to try the accused, in the absence of such witnesses⁴

2 "At once" — The list of witnesses should be presented as soon as the charge has been framed¹ The view taken in the undermentioned decision² that it is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to put in his list of defence witnesses on the day when the order of commitment is made is, it is submitted, incorrect

3. Right of accused filing the list — Enforcement of attendance of witnesses. — The accused is entitled, as a matter of right, to have the witnesses named by him in the list, summoned and examined on his behalf at the trial¹ In the event of the witnesses ignoring or not complying with the summons, the accused is entitled to have their attendance enforced² and the Crown is charged with the duty of securing their attendance³ The examination of such witnesses cannot be refused on the ground that it would be inconvenient to adjourn the case in order to secure their attendance⁴ When some of the witnesses named in the list given by the accused do not appear, an application for enforcing their attendance should not be refused, though made when the case is ready for arguments⁵ A conviction will not, however, be set aside on the ground that the attendance of some of the witnesses was not enforced unless the accused has been thereby prejudiced⁶

4 Refusal of Magistrate to summon witnesses — A Magistrate may, under the second proviso to S 216, refuse to summon any witness mentioned in the list on the ground that such witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice He cannot, however, refuse to summon a witness on the ground that he is suspected to be implicated in the offence with which the accused is charged¹ or that the Magistrate entertains doubts as to the value of the evidence of such witness² or that the list contains a large number of witnesses³ Where a further list is given under sub s (2), subsequent to the order of commitment, the Magistrate is bound, on receipt of such list, to exercise his discretion and state distinctly whether he would summon the witnesses or not If he is of opinion that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate ought to proceed under the second proviso to S 216⁴

5 Reserving of defence by the accused — Though the language of the section is imperative, there is nothing in it which enables the Magistrate to prevent the accused person from reserving his defence for the Court of Session¹ As a matter of fact, the accused is entitled to reserve his defence, and refuse to disclose the names of witnesses whom he intends to call at the trial² Thus, where an accused on being asked to give a list of witnesses does not give it but says he will file a list subsequently, the Magistrate would be acting with sound judicial judgment and in accordance with law, if he does not cross-examine the accused as to the names of his witnesses and what those witnesses would be called to prove.³ This is because there may be the danger, in some cases of the accused running the risk of his witnesses being tampered with. In such a case it will be wise on the part of the accused to decline to give a list to the Magistrate, and to reserve his defence for the Court of Session.⁴

But an accused person who has reserved his defence cannot claim to keep back any of his witnesses mentioned in the list from being examined by the Magistrate under S 212 on the ground that his right of reserving the defence would be prejudicially affected thereby.⁵

6 Failure of the accused to give a list — Effect of — If an accused person on being asked by the Magistrate to give in a list of his witnesses declines to give in such a list he cannot compel the Magistrate after committal to issue summonses for witnesses on his behalf. He is, however, entitled under S 291 to call any witness in the Court of Session and examine him if he is in attendance in such Court whether or not he has caused such witness to be summoned.¹ In such a case if the accused applies to the Sessions Court for issue of summons to any witness he is not entitled to the issue of such summons. But the Sessions Court has a discretion to issue summons in such a case and where the Sessions Court considers that the evidence of a witness would be material it is the duty of the Sessions Court to issue summons to such witness.²

Where an accused person gives no list of witnesses to the committing Magistrate and applies at a late stage of the trial in the Sessions Court for an adjournment thereof in order to procure the attendance of witnesses for his defence it would be perfectly legal for the Court to refuse the application.³ See also S 291 and Notes thereon.

7 Further list — It has been seen that for an accused to have his witnesses summoned as of right he must give in a list under this section. Where he does not give in his list immediately after the charge is framed the Magistrate has a discretion to accept a list subsequently.¹ When a further list has been allowed to be filed by the Magistrate under sub s. (2), it is governed by the same principles as a list under sub s. (1).²

examine such witnesses section 211.

1 Scope of the section. — The object of the section is twofold firstly to prevent any hasty commitment and to ensure a thorough enquiry previous to the commitment and secondly to prevent the concoction of false evidence after the commitment² In order to achieve this object the section gives the Magistrate the widest possible discretion to summon and examine any witness named in the list given by the accused under S 211 Thus he may summon and examine the witnesses for the defence even when the accused has reserved his defence for the Court of Session³ The discretion thus vested entitles the Magistrate to ascertain after weighing the evidence,⁴ whether there is a presumption of guilt against the accused or whether he is innocent⁵ for it is possible that after hearing the witnesses for the defence the enquiry may result in the discharge of the accused under S 213 sub s (2)⁶ But this discretion has to be exercised sparingly and cautiously as any inconsiderate or premature examination of witnesses may prejudice the accused in his defence at the trial in the Sessions Court⁷

The accused has no right to have his witnesses summoned and examined after the charge is framed under S 210⁸ And a Magistrate is not required to record his reasons for acting or refusing to act under this section⁹

1 "May make an order committing the accused"—This section leaves it to the discretion of the committing Magistrate whether or not to commit an accused to the Sessions. Hence, even after a charge is framed with a view to commitment the Magistrate may change his mind and proceed to try the case himself¹ or cancel the charge and discharge the accused see sub-section (2)

offence is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the reasons must disclose grounds, not only for not discharging the accused, but also for committing the case to the Court of Session instead of its being tried by the Magistrate himself² As to what are proper grounds for committing a case, see Notes on ss 206, 207, 209 and 210

5. Power of Magistrate to cancel charge and discharge accused or to try him himself. — The enactment of sub section (2) in the Code of 1898 makes it clear that even after a charge is framed with a view to commitment, the Magistrate has power to cancel the charge and discharge the accused if, in view of the evidence of the defence witnesses examined subsequent to the charge, the Magistrate considers that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the case¹ The decisions prior to the Code of 1898, which held that the Magistrate had no such power,² are no longer good law But the sub-section is only intended to provide for cases, in which the evidence recorded after a charge, so changes the aspect of the case as to leave no reasonable doubt that a conviction is not sustainable It does not apply when the evidence merely casts some doubt on the case³ But when the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the evidence of the defence witnesses, examined subsequent to the charge, rebuts that produced for the prosecution or renders it so incredible or unreliable that a conviction will not follow, he may act upon his opinion and pass an order of discharge⁴ See also s 209, Notes 3 and 5 and s 210, Note 5

The power to cancel a charge and discharge the accused applies only before the case is committed Once the case has been committed, the Magistrate becomes functus officio and cannot thereafter change his mind and cancel the commitment or discharge the accused⁵ Moreover the Magistrate's power under the sub section arises only in cases where he has taken further evidence after the framing of the charge where he has not taken such further evidence he cannot cancel the charge once framed and discharge the accused⁶ The power of cancelling a charge once framed and discharging the accused does not apply to trials of warrant cases the only course open to a Magistrate who after framing a charge in such cases finds that the charge is unsustainable is to acquit the accused see S 255 and Notes thereon see also Note 1 and Notes on Section 210

6 "After hearing the witnesses for the defence"—As has been seen in Note 5 the power of the Magistrate under sub s (2) to cancel the charge and discharge the accused arises only in cases in which after framing the charge the Magistrate examines further defence witnesses where further evidence is not taken by him he cannot cancel the charge and discharge the accused¹

As to whether the phrase witnesses for defence in sub s (2) is wide enough to cover evidence elicited by cross-examination of prosecution witnesses see Note 7

7 Right of accused to cross examine prosecution witnesses after charge is framed.—Under the general principles of evidence (see Evidence Act, Section 176) and the specific provision contained in S 208 subsection (2) the accused in preliminary inquiries in sessions cases is entitled as of right to cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution Ordinarily the cross examination of each witness must be made immediately after his examination in chief is over it cannot be reserved till the examination in chief of all the witnesses for a side is over though the Court can in the exercise of its discretion allow such reservation Hence an accused who has declined to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses then and there and who has not been permitted by the Magistrate to reserve his cross examination till a later stage is not entitled to cross examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed¹ a fortiori if he has already cross examined the prosecution witnesses under S 208 before the charge was framed he is not entitled to cross-examine them again after the charge is framed² (Contrast the right of an accused in the trial of warrant cases under S 256) The expression witnesses for the defence in sub s (2) refers to witnesses whom the Magistrate in his discretion examines under S 212 that expression does not include the witnesses for the prosecution who are cross examined and therefore does not confer any right on the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed³ But the Magistrate has an inherent power to allow the accused an opportunity to cross examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed⁴ Further if the accused did not have an opportunity of cross-

1. Legislative changes.

- (1) There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861.
- (2) The explanation to S 197 of the Code of 1872, which corresponded to this section, did not contain the equivalent of the words 'under S 213,' and "or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S 478."
- (3) In S 215 of the Code of 1882 the words 'under S 213 or 214' were for the first time introduced and even that section did not contain the words 'or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S 478.'
- (4) In the Code of 1893, the words 'or by a Court of Session under S 477 or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S 478' were introduced after the word "Magistrate".
- (5) The section was amended in 1923. The words 'or S 214' appearing after the figures '213' were removed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 12 [XII] of 1923, consequent upon the repeal of S 214. Likewise the words 'or by a Court of Session under S 477' occurring after the words "by a competent Magistrate" were removed by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 18 [XVIII] of 1923, consequent upon the repeal of S 477.

2. Scope of the section — Where a commitment is made —

(1) under S 213 by a competent Magistrate, or

(2) by a Civil or Revenue Court under S 478, it can be quashed only by the High Court and only on a *point of law*¹

When the commitment is not made under S 213 or S 478, this section does not apply. Thus a commitment under S 437² or under S 446³ or by the Appellate Court under S 423⁴ or by the High Court under S 526⁵ is not one under S 213 and the High Court can, in revision where such an order of commitment is open to revision, consider the propriety of the order of commitment on points both of law and of fact. But even in such cases, in actual practice, the High Court will not go beyond the rule contained in this section and interfere in revision on grounds of fact⁶. An order of commitment under S 347, however, falls within the purview of S 213 and can be quashed if at all only under this section⁷.

When a commitment is not made by a competent Magistrate, the commitment may be quashed under S 532, which does not apply when the commitment is made by a he himself can cure the irregularity in the committal proceedings in a trial before him⁷

The Judicial Commissioner of Sind, sitting in the Sessions Division, is not divested of his dual capacity as a High Court Judge and he can quash commitments under this section even when sitting as a Sessions Judge⁸ Similarly, a single Judge of the High Court exercising original criminal jurisdiction has jurisdiction to quash a commitment made to that Court under this section⁹

The principles laid down in S. 537 should generally guide the High Court in dealing with an application under this section¹⁰

8. "On a point of law."—A commitment can be quashed only on a point of law¹ The test is to see from the judgment of the Magistrate what his findings on the evidence are and whether those findings are capable prima facie of sustaining the charges he has framed and on which the commitment to the Court of Session is made.² A commitment should only be quashed when on the face of it there is something of the nature of a fatal flaw in the prosecution³ In dealing with an application under this section, the High Court is not required to appreciate the evidence, but it proceeds on the assumption that the facts as stated in the order of commitment will be proved at the trial All that the High Court is required to apply its mind to is to see whether, assuming the facts are proved, they do justify the conviction of the accused or not⁴ The following are illustrative instances of errors of law justifying the quashing of the commitment:

9 Grounds held insufficient for quashing commitment.—The following have been held not to be grounds for quashing a commitment —

- (1) Where the Magistrate finds subsequent to the order of committal that he should not have committed the accused¹
- (2) Where a joint commitment is made of several accused when with reference to s 233, they should have been committed separately. In such cases the Sessions Court can try the accused separately or amend the charge.²
- (3) Where the committing Magistrate acts on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate from whose file the case has been transferred to his own Court (s 350 applies to such a case³)
- (4) Where the commitment is made merely on wrong exercise of discretion⁴
- (5) Where the only evidence against the accused is the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The reason is that acting upon such evidence in proper cases is not illegal⁵. Where the commitment is made to the same Sessions Judge who gave the direction for prosecution of the accused for the offence of giving false evidence before him, when there is no Assistant or Additional Sessions Judge in the District⁶
- (6) Where the first class Magistrate who had discharged the accused under s 209, committed him as per orders of the District Magistrate passed under s 436. The reason is that the order of such Magistrate was not without jurisdiction⁷
- (7) Where a civil suit is pending in respect of a document in connexion with which the accused had been committed by the Civil Judge under s 478, for using a forged document⁸. In such cases it would, however, be desirable to postpone further criminal proceedings till the decision of the civil suit⁹
- (8) Irregularities of procedure before the Magistrate who transfers the case to a superior Magistrate under section 319 do not vitiate the committal by the latter

- (15) Where the case is triable by a Court of Session, the mere fact that the Magistrate did not give reasons for commitment when there was a specially empowered Magistrate who could try the case¹⁷
- (16) Where an approver whose pardon has been withdrawn has been committed, the mere fact that he was examined as a witness only in the preliminary enquiry and not in the trial before the Sessions Judge or the fact that the pardon had been withdrawn by the District Magistrate and not by the Sessions Judge is not a ground for quashing the commitment¹⁸

evidence is not direct but circumstantial²² The test to be applied, in such cases, to decide whether a committal ought or ought not to be made on the facts, is this—asuming that the whole evidence telling against the accused is true, is there a case which a Judge at a trial could leave to a jury? If the evidence is such that the Judge would have been bound to rule that there was no evidence on which a jury could convict, then a committal ought not to be made. If there was any evidence which called for an answer—however great the preponderance in favour of the prisoner might be—then the committal was proper²³

Penal Code, cannot be quashed because the document in question has not been given in evidence³³

- (28) The commitment of an European British subject to the Court of Session by the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Baluchistan is not without jurisdiction and cannot be quashed³⁴

See also the undermentioned cases³⁵

As to whether a commitment can be quashed on ground of want of territorial jurisdiction, see S 531, Note 2

10 Time for quashing commitment. — The High Court can, according to the view taken by the Patna High Court, quash the commitment at any stage of the proceedings¹ The Calcutta High Court had, in an earlier case,² taken a similar view but has, in recent cases,³ expressed the view that a commitment cannot be quashed after the accused has been put on his trial and pleads to the charge as it is then too late to object to the commitment This latter view is shared also by the High Courts of Madras⁴ and Lahore⁵ and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind⁶ Where the accused is put on his trial and pleads to the charge, the Judge should proceed according to law and dispose of the case under Chapter XXIII of the Code or the Public Prosecutor may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw the prosecution under S 494⁷

11 Effect of quashing commitment. — The primary effect of the order quashing the commitment is to supersede any action taken by the Magistrate under S 210, and his proceedings subsequent thereto In such a case, it is necessary for the Magistrate to go back to the point at which he took cognizance of the complaint The order does not amount to discharge of the accused and no fresh complaint is necessary¹ The accused may be charged again with the offence²

216. When the accused has given in any list of witnesses under section 211 and has been committed for trial, the Magistrate shall summon such of the witnesses included in the list, as have not appeared before himself, to appear before the Court to which the accused has been committed

Provided that, where the accused has been committed to the High Court, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, leave such witnesses to be summoned by the Clerk of the Crown, and such witnesses may be summoned accordingly

Provided, also, that if the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay, or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate may require the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witness is material, and, if he is not so satisfied, may refuse to summon the witness (recording his reasons for such refusal), or may before summoning him require such sum to be deposited as such Magistrate thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness and all other proper expenses

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

In S. 228 of the Code of 1861 it was provided that if the Magistrate was not satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for believing that a particular witness was material he was not bound to summon the witness 'unless such a sum shall be deposited with the Magistrate as he shall consider necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness' Hence even if the Magistrate was not satisfied that a witness was a material witness he was bound to summon him if the accused was prepared to pay his expenses and deposited the expenses with the Magistrate¹ This position was altered in the Code of 1872 which left it to the discretion of the Magistrate to summon a witness and empowered him to refuse to summon a witness even though the accused might be willing and prepared to bear the expenses of the witnesses.

Changes made in 1882 —

The provision as to leaving it to the Clerk of the Crown to summon the witnesses in cases of commitment to the High Court was new

Changes made in 1898 —

The words 'and all other proper expenses' were added at the end of the section.

2 Scope and applicability of the section — It is the duty of the committing Magistrate to see that all the evidence available, whether for the prosecution or for the defence is before the Sessions Court¹ The procedure provided in this section is to summon the witnesses named by the accused to give evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court. This applies to the witnesses named by the accused who have not been examined by the Magistrate. The next section applies to the complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution and such of the witnesses for the accused as have appeared and given evidence before the committing Magistrate. In their case, that section provides that the Magistrate should require them to execute bonds for their appearance and for giving evidence in the Sessions Court at the trial.

Under this section, the Magistrate is bound to summon the witnesses who have been named in the list given by the accused under s 211 and who have not appeared before him,² except in the cases mentioned in the two provisos. But this duty arises only in the case of persons named by the accused in the list supplied by him to the Magistrate under s 211.³ Hence, where on being asked to give such list the accused declines to do so, the Magistrate is not bound to summon any witnesses that he may desire to be called subsequent to the commitment.⁴

Under s 291, the Sessions Judge is bound to enforce the attendance of the witnesses summoned under this section, who fail to appear at the trial.⁵

3. Refusal to summon unnecessary witness. — The Magistrate has no power to refuse to summon a witness on the ground that his evidence will not be material,¹ unless he considers that the witness is included in the list merely for purposes of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice. But where the Magistrate considers that the witness is included in the list for any such purpose, he can require the accused to show how the evidence of the witness will be material. Where he is not satisfied that the evidence of the witness will be material, he may refuse to summon him recording his reasons for doing so.² As to the liability of the accused to pay process fees and other fees for summoning witnesses see Notes on s 544.

to commit cases to the Sessions. Moreover, the power exists only till the commencement of the trial in the Sessions Court. Where the trial has actually commenced the Magistrate has no power to add to the record by examining additional witnesses under this section even under the orders of the Sessions Court.² But before the commencement of the trial, the power can be exercised at any time. The Magistrate can exercise the power on his own accord or on being directed to do so by the Sessions Judge who, on examining the record, finds gaps in the evidence which he deems necessary to be filled up.³ Even in cases in which the accused has confessed his guilt, the Magistrate is justified in examining supplementary witnesses so as to have on the record all the material evidence.⁴ The additional evidence can be taken either at the request of the prosecution or of the defence, but the Magistrate should be fair to both the sides and if he examines additional witnesses on one side he should allow the other side to let in rebutting evidence if it deems to do so.⁵ Under this section the Magistrate can only supplement the evidence already taken. He has no power to add to or alter the charge after the order of commitment. Similarly, the power to amend or add to the charge under S 220 applies only to cases where the charge is imperfect as at the date of commitment. That section cannot put the charge in an amended or added to on the basis of supplementary evidence taken under this section.⁶

3 Free copy of evidence to be given to accused — The object of this section is that when the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate a copy of the evidence taken and examined under this section should be given to the accused free of cost. Such a copy may

If such statement ^b[has been omitted,] the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

This is equivalent to a statement that A's act fell within the definition of murder given in Ss 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code; that it did not fall within any of the general exceptions of the same Code, and that it did not fall within any of the five exceptions to S 300, or that, if it did fall within Exception I, one or other of the three provisos to that exception applied to it.

(b) A is charged, under S 326 of the Indian Penal Code, with voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B by means of an instrument for shooting. This is equivalent to a statement that the case was not provided for by S 335 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the general exceptions did not apply to it.

(c) A is accused of murder, cheating, theft, extortion, adultery or criminal intimidation, or using a false property-mark. The charge may state that A committed murder, or cheating, or theft, or extortion, or adultery, or criminal intimidation, or that he used a false property-mark, without reference to the definitions of those crimes contained in the Indian Penal Code, but the sections under which the offence is punishable must, in each instance, be referred to in the charge.

1 Charge—General — It is a fundamental principle of criminal law that the accused should be informed with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him¹ Otherwise he may be seriously prejudiced in his defence.² It is, therefore imperative that before a person is convicted of any offence he should (subject to certain exceptions) be formally charged with having committed the offence specified and be given an opportunity to defend himself against such charge³ He can be convicted only on proof of the particular offences so specified and not for offences not so specified⁴ conviction obtained before the moment of time when the charge is framed⁸. It may also be noted that for purposes of S 75 of the Penal Code, a person cannot be charged with conviction for an offence committed subsequent to the date of the offence for which he is on trial. Similarly S 75 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the offence is committed before the conviction for the former offence⁹.

The word "punishment" in this section does not include an order of the court not notifying the address of the offender and consequently it is not a purpose of making this order, that the previous conviction should be mentioned in the charge.¹⁰

Where the previous conviction has been omitted from the charge, it may be added at any time before sentence is passed. A sentence passed already cannot be varied on the subsequent discovery of the fact that the prisoner has been previously convicted. The High Court may, however, in revision, add the charge in proper cases and direct that it be taken on such charge.¹¹

As to the mode of proof of previous convictions, see S 511 and Notes thereon. The sub-section was amended in the year 1923. The sub-section as it stood before the amendment has been quoted in the foot-note appearing under the text of the section given above. The amendment does not affect the mode of proof of previous convictions.¹²

See also the undermentioned case bearing upon S 75 of the Penal Code¹³.

7. Charge for offences one of which is triable as a warrant case and the other as a summons case — Where it is intended to proceed to try a person for two offences one of which is triable as a warrant case (in which a charge is to be framed) and the other as a summons case (in which no charge need be framed), the charge in respect of the former offence should also state the latter offence¹.

held in the undermentioned case¹ that when a person is tried for an offence which is liable to be punished with whipping, the liability to whipping must be stated in the charge

9 Aggravating circumstances.—Where a person is charged of an offence which provides a certain punishment under certain circumstances and a higher punishment under aggravating circumstances, the existence of such aggravating circumstances should be set forth in the charge¹

10 Special exceptions.—Under ss 235 to 237 of the Code of 1861, the charge had to deny the existence of special exceptions where the section defining the offence charged had exceptions.¹ This is now no longer necessary as those sections have not been repeated in the present Code

11 Constructive offences — Under s 149 of the Penal Code, if an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, every person who at the time of committing that offence is a member of the same assembly is guilty of that offence. Where a person is charged with an offence constructively by force of s 149 the charge should specify such fact. Thus, where the accused was only charged with an offence under s 126 of the Railways Act, a conviction for an offence under that section read with s 149 on the basis of constructive liability cannot be sustained where it has prejudiced the accused¹. Where A is charged constructively for an offence, it clearly intimates to him that he did not himself commit the substantive offence but that he is guilty inasmuch as somebody else in prosecution of the common object of the riot did commit such substantive offence. If the person charged with committing the substantive offence is acquitted of such offence, the offence by implication also disappears, and A cannot be convicted of the substantive offence².

A charge under s 149 is not for any specific named offence and the fact that an offence is committed in pursuance of the common object is of the essence of the case. It is, therefore, necessary to mention the same in the charge unless it has already been set out in the main charge³.

accused with particular acts committed by him — Evidence showing that accused knew what acts they were alleged to have done — Held, conviction could not be set aside as there was no miscarriage of justice.)

12 Unnecessary averments in the charge—Surplusage — As has been seen in Note 1 a charge should never contain more than what is necessary for the prosecution to prove.¹ Allegations in the charge which are not necessary to be proved to constitute an offence and which might be entirely omitted without affecting the charge against the prisoner and without detriment to the indictment are however considered as mere surplusage and may be disregarded in evidence.²

There is a difference of opinion as to whether there should be a definite charge in prosecutions under the Insolvency Acts. According to the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur it is not essential that there should be a definite charge a finding and a conviction as a foundation for a sentence under the said provisions. All that the law requires is that the principles underlying a criminal trial should be observed. So where an insolvent proceeded against under that Act was informed of the nature of the proceedings and the offence with which he was charged it was held that the essentials of criminal trial were sufficiently complied with.³ The High Court of Calcutta⁴ and the Chief Court of the Punjab⁵ have however, taken a contrary view.

particulars of the above point must be given as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged² But the charge is not necessarily invalidated by the giving of more particulars than are absolutely necessary³

As to the effect of an omission to state or of an error in the statement of the particular required by this section see Ss. 225 and 232 As to when the manner of the commission of the offence should be given in the charge see S 223 and Notes thereon

3 Time of offence — The time of the alleged offence should be given in the charge with as much particularity as is necessary to give the accused sufficient notice of the matter of which he is charged¹ Where it is impossible to specify the particular date on which the offence was committed it will be sufficient to state two dates between which the offence was committed²

As to the effect of error or omission in regard to this particular, see sections 225 and 232.

the offences in respect of all the three gross sums are alleged to have been committed within a space of twelve months⁴

Though the sub section dispenses with the specification of particular items or the dates on which they were misappropriated, it requires the gross sum alleged to have been misappropriated and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed to be specified in the charge a charge which does not specify even these particulars will be bad⁵ Similarly, the sub section does not in any way affect the principle that the accused must have a definite charge to answer, a charge which contains the gross sum and the dates as mentioned in this sub section may yet be bad as being too vague⁶ Nor does the section dispense with the necessity of a finding as to a definite sum having been misappropriated *before the accused can be convicted*⁷

The sub section does not prohibit the specification of particular items misappropriated where a gross sum is given as the subject matter of the offence⁸ So also, where a charge is laid under this section for a gross sum embezzled, the Court is not precluded from examining the evidence in respect of each item which went to make up the total amount entered in the charge sheet⁹ Nor does the fact that particular items are specified in the charge detract from its character as a charge for a single offence and convert it into a charge for as many offences as there are items particularised¹⁰

The sub section only provides that if and when a charge is laid for a gross sum instead of for particular items, the charge is to be treated as a charge for a single offence irrespective of the number of items of which the gross sum is composed It does not prohibit the framing of different charges in respect of different items¹¹ nor permit such charges when framed to be treated as a charge for a single offence¹² It applies not only to case of a criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation cannot be made use of to justify a joint trial of such offence with an offence of a different character¹⁷

The sub-section requires that the period during which the offence is alleged to have been committed should not exceed one year. Thus where the dates of misappropriation of the various items extend over a period of more than one year, they cannot all be lumped together in the same charge¹⁸

The provision enabling it to be stated that the offence was committed between certain dates (instead of on a certain date) applies not only to cases where different items are alleged to have been misappropriated on different occasions and a charge is framed in respect of the gross sum made up of the different items but also to cases where a specific sum is alleged to have been the subject of the offence¹⁹

Where a single charge is framed under this section in respect of the embezzlement of different sums it is only a single sentence that can be passed on the accused a separate sentence cannot be passed in respect of each of the items included in the charge²⁰

Under S 181 sub s. (2) a charge of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust can be tried or inquired into either at the place where the offence was committed or at the place where any part of the property was received or retained by the accused. As this sub-section (of S 222) enables any number of acts of misappropriation committed in the course of the same year to be combined in the same charge jurisdiction to try the 7 Applicability of sub section (2) to cases where there are two or more accused persons — There is a conflict of decisions as to the applicability of sub s. (2) to cases where two or more persons are accused of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation so as to enable a single charge being framed in respect of the total sum misappropriated in a given period where such sum is made up of several items misappropriated on different occasions. On the one hand it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the sub section contemplates only cases in which there is only one accused person and that where there are two or more accused persons in a case, separate charges must be framed in respect of the several items as for different offences¹. The Madras High Court has on the other hand held that there is no reason to restrict the scope of the sub section in this way and even in cases where there are two or more accused persons in a case it is open to the Court to lump together the different items misappropriated on different occasions and frame a single charge in respect of the total sum composed of the different items². The Bombay High Court³ and the Oudh Chief Court⁴ have also accepted the same view. But where the charge alleges that some of the accused took part in the misappropriation only in respect of some of the items of which the total sum is composed, the sub section has no application and a single charge cannot be framed so as to cover the acts of all the accused⁵.

8 Charge under sub section (2)—Whether trial for another item misappropriated during same period is barred — Where an accused is charged under sub s. (2) with criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum alleged to have been misappropriated by him between two given dates and is convicted or acquitted of such charge, he can be tried again in respect of another sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by him during the same period but not included in the sum which was the subject matter of the previous trial¹. Such a trial is not barred under s 403. The reason is that in such a case the subsequent trial is not for the same offence as formed the subject of previous trial. A fortiori where the previous trial was not for a gross sum misappropriated between two dates but was for misappropriation of specific sums of money received on specific dates a fresh trial for another offence in respect of a different sum of money said to have been misappropriated about the same time is not barred²

9 Charge of criminal conspiracy — In a charge of criminal conspiracy to commit an offence the same certainty is not required in stating the object of the conspiracy as in a charge for the offence conspired to be committed. Thus a charge of criminal conspiracy to commit a criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation is not bad for want of particulars as to dates etc. of the alleged misappropriation¹. Nor is such a charge bad because the period of the conspiracy is said to exceed one year².

223.* When the nature of the case is such that the particulars

As to the extent to which particulars of the manner of commission of an offence should be given in a charge, no hard and fast rule can be laid down Each case must depend on its own circumstances, regard being had to the question whether the particulars given are such as to give the accused *sufficient notice of the matter he has to meet*⁸ Besides, the charge must allege all facts which are essential factors of the offence in question—see S 221⁹ But a charge should not be prolix and rambling and should not contain unnecessary allegations¹⁰ are false is not enough³ Where a person is accused of giving false evidence on several occasions, each occasion should form the subject of a distinct head of the charge⁴ The offence of giving false evidence is one with a specific name within the meaning of S 221 it is therefore not necessary to state that the charge falls within a particular part of the section⁵ Nor is it necessary to state that the subject of the false statement is material to the result of the inquiry⁶ Where there are several false statements in the same deposition, there should only be a single charge for all such statements⁷

As to the mode of framing a charge where the accused has made two contradictory statements but it is doubtful which of them is false, see Note 5 on S 235

4 Rioting — 'Rioting' is an offence with a specific name and, under sub s (2) of S 221 may be described by its name only¹ When a person is charged with 'rioting' it means that the prosecution alleges that all the necessary ingredients constituting the offence of rioting are present it is not necessary to set out what those ingredients are² There is, however a conflict of opinions as to whether the common object of the unlawful assembly is necessary to be mentioned in the charge On the one hand it has been held that the common object does not come within the particulars mentioned in Ss 221 and 222 nor within S 223 as a manner in which the offence is committed and that therefore, it is not necessary to be stated in the charge though it would be desirable to do so³ In *Kudrutullah v Emperor*⁴ it was held that the offence of rioting 'can be legally described by its specific name and the question whether any further particulars are necessary under section 223, Criminal Procedure Code must be a question of discretion according to the circumstances of each case This seems to suggest that the common object may be considered as the manner in which the offence was committed It is apparently in this view that it has been held in a number of cases that the common object must be stated in a charge of rioting⁵

5 House-breaking, criminal trespass, etc — A charge of house breaking by night or lurking house trespass under S 457, Penal Code or an offence under S 451, id., is not an offence with a specific name, therefore, so much of the definition of the offence as is necessary to give notice to the accused of the matter charged must be set out under S 221. Thus, it must specify the intention with which the accused is alleged to have committed the trespass.¹ Where the charge does not specify any intention of the kind mentioned in the section, the accused cannot be convicted under it² unless it is quite certain that he has not in any way been misled or prejudiced in his defence by the defect in the charge see S 225. Similarly, it is not open to a Court to convict an accused under S 457, Penal Code when the intention found to have been entertained by him is different from that specified in the charge,³ unless the accused has not been misled by the defect in the charge.⁴ But where the intention specified in the charge under S 457 is not established, it is open to the Court to convict him under S 456⁵ see S 233 Note 1.

See also the undermentioned case.⁶

For a conviction under S 417 (criminal trespass) which is an offence with a specific name, it is not necessary to specify the ulterior offence the accused intended to commit.⁷

6 Sedition, promoting class hatred, etc — In a charge under S 124A, Penal Code (sedition) or S 153A, Penal Code (promoting class-hatred) it has been held that it is not necessary to set out the offending passages of the speech or writing in question where the case for the prosecution is that the speech or writing in question taken as a whole comes within the mischief of the law¹ The requirements of the law are satisfied if the charge gives such a description of the words used as is reasonably sufficient to enable the accused to know the matter with which he is charged²

7 Cheating—As the illustration (b) to this section shows in a case of cheating the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed so as to give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged¹ Whether the manner set out is reasonably sufficient to give the accused such notice depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case Where the manner was described in the charge as follows by deceiving with false representations and promises as well as by conduct it was held that the expression used was too vague and indefinite² Where the charge is for an offence under the first portion of s 415 Penal Code it is not necessary to state that any loss was caused by the inducement³ though it should be stated that the property induced to be delivered was that of the prosecutor⁴ But where the charge is under the second portion of s 415 it is necessary to state in what way the complainant would be a loser as a result of the inducement⁵ The reason is that the term manner in this section includes with reference to an offence of cheating every ingredient by virtue of which the act ceases to be one of mere non criminal deception and becomes one of cheating within the meaning of s 415 Penal Code and the effect of the deception upon the victim's body mind reputation or property would thus be a part of the manner of cheating⁶ A charge of an attempt to cheat should state the persons upon whom the attempt was made and the manner in which he was induced⁷ cannot be misled in any way the mere fact that the exact defamatory words are not reproduced does not vitiate the charge.² Where defamatory words are alleged to have been uttered by the accused on several occasions the charge must give particulars of the various occasions.³

9 Falsification of accounts — A charge of falsification of accounts under s 47A Penal Code must specify the entries alleged to be falsified.¹

10 Hurt grievous hurt, etc — A charge under s 324 Penal Code should follow the wording of the definition of the offence¹ inasmuch as it is not an offence with a specific name but it need not deny that the hurt was caused on grave and sudden provocation.² Where two persons commit an affray and also cause hurt to each other the charge must be for the more serious offence of hurt.³ Where the accused is alleged to have caused several hurts a general charge covering all the hurts without particularising the details will be bad.⁴

11 Forgery, etc — A charge of forgery should contain a description of the document forged. It is not sufficient to say merely that the accused committed forgery by signing the name of a certain person (specified) on a document.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.

12 Culpable homicide and murder — Illustration (e) to this section shows that the charge for murder need not set out the manner in which A murdered B. But as has been seen in the Notes on s 291 where the charge does give details it must be fully and correctly given. Thus it should follow the definition and language of s 300 Penal Code.¹ Where the murder is alleged to have been effected by blows it should set out that the blows were inflicted with the intention of causing death or that they were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and that they were intentionally inflicted.² It

13. Receiving stolen property.—A charge of receiving stolen property should state that the accused dishonestly retained or received stolen property knowing or having reason to believe that it had been stolen¹ It should also mention the name of the person to whom the property belonged²

14. Kidnapping and abduction.—In a charge of kidnapping under s 366, Penal Code, it should appear clearly whether the accused persons are being charged with kidnapping or with abduction, and similarly whether the intent alleged was an intent to compel the victim to marry against her will or whether the kidnapping or abduction was with the knowledge that it was likely that the victim would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse¹ It is always wise where a charge is made, in respect of the same occurrence, both of kidnapping and abducting, that two heads should be made But it is not illegal to make the two charges under one head The point to be seen in each case is whether the accused person was prejudiced thereby² See also the case cited below³

15. Extortion—Where the offence charged involves consequences which may be stated in a general form such as may arise in a case of arson, where a man may by one act of arson set fire and destroy several stacks of several persons, no particulars are required, the nature of the offence being sufficiently stated by the date, time and place of setting of fire, but a charge for extortion or for obtaining money from persons by unlawful means should state with accuracy the approximate amounts alleged to have been obtained from each person and the nature of the extortion used against each person¹ See also the undermentioned cases²

(a) A is charged under section 242 of the Indian Penal Code with 'having been in possession of counterfeit coin having known at the time when he became possessed thereof that such coin was counterfeit, the word 'fraudulently' being omitted in the charge. Unless it appears that A was in fact misled by this omission the error shall not be regarded as material

(b) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge or is set out incorrectly. A defends himself calls witnesses and gives his own account of the transaction. The Court may infer from this that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating is not material

(c) A is charged with cheating B and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge. There were many transactions between A and B and A had no means of knowing to which of them the charge referred, and offered no defence. The Court may infer from such facts that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating was, in the case, a material error

(d) A is charged with the murder of Khoda Baksh on the 21st January 1882. In fact the murdered person's name was Haidar Baksh, and the date of the murder was the 20th January 1882. A was never charged with any murder but one, and had heard the inquiry before the Magistrate which referred exclusively to the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from these facts that A was not misled, and that the error in the charge was immaterial.

(e) A was charged with murdering Haidar Baksh on the 20th January 1882 and Khoda Baksh (who tried to arrest him for that murder) on the 21st January 1882. When charged for the murder of Haidar Baksh he was tried for the murder of Khoda Baksh. The witnesses present in his defence were witnesses in the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from this that A was misled and that the error was material

1 Scope of the section — This section and s 537 deal with cases where a charge is framed but there are errors omissions or irregularities in the charge. held that the irregularity of charging together different offences instead of charging them separately was curable under this section and S 537 if the accused was not prejudiced³ This seems to suggest that joining together in the same charge several offences which must be separately charged is an error in stating the offence

It is for the Court to decide in each case whether the defect in the charge has misled the accused⁴ In considering the question whether the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by the defect in the charge, regard must be had to the fact that the objection to the frame of the charge was not raised till a late stage in the proceedings⁵ See also S 537, Explanation

The section is aimed, among other things, at objections on the ground of variance between the charge and the evidence⁶ But the fundamental principle in all criminal charges is that the accused should not be prejudiced in his defence and, therefore, where a charge expressed in vague terms has been understood in a certain sense and proceedings have gone on, on such basis, it is not thereafter open to the prosecution to contend that the charge means something else⁷ The object of the section is that technical defects in the charge should not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice Hence, where the guilt of the accused has been proved, he can be convicted notwithstanding that the charge contains unnecessary allegations which the prosecution has not proved⁸

This section lays down what errors and omissions in the charge should be regarded as material Section 232 provides for the procedure to be followed in cases where an appellate or revisional Court considers that the defect in the charge is a material one See also Notes on sections 535 and 537

2 Charge in cases of rioting, unlawful assembly, etc — Under S 223, a charge of an offence of rioting (or connected offences) should specify the common object of the unlawful assembly An error or omission in this respect will vitiate the trial if the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by reason of such defect in the charge¹ But if the accused has not been prejudiced by reason of such error or omission, the defect is not a material one* Even in cases where the charge is to the effect that the accused is liable cons ructively under s 149 of the Penal Code for the acts of his companions, the trial is not necessarily vitiated because the charge does not specify, or states erroneously the common object in pursuance of which the act is alleged to have been done³

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872

There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. This section was first enacted in the Code of 1872 as S. 416. But even under the Code of 1861 it was held that the Sessions Court had power under S. 211 (now S. 227) to amend the charge framed by the committing Magistrate¹.

Changes made in 1882

- (1) The words 'at all' which occurred after the words "without any charge" in S. 416 of the Code of 1872 were omitted.
- (2) The words "or with an imperfect or erroneous charge" were substituted for the words "or upon a charge which the Court, upon reference to the proceedings before the committing Magistrate considers improper" which occurred in the Code of 1872.
- (3) The words 'may draw up a charge' which occurred in the Code of 1872, were substituted by the words 'may frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge.'²
- (4) The words requiring a copy of the new charge to be given to the accused were omitted.

Changes made in 1898

The illustrations to the section were added.

2 Scope of the section — Section 193, sub s (1) provides that except as otherwise expressly provided by the Code or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court of Session can take cognizance of a case as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the accused has been committed to it by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf. Similarly, under S. 194 the High Court is empowered to take cognizance of offences as a Court of original jurisdiction upon a commitment made to it in manner hereinafter provided. The present section is by way of an exception to these sections¹. It enables the High Court or the Sessions Court to amend or add to the charge on which an accused has been committed to it for trial. It also enables the High Court or the Sessions Court to frame a suitable charge in cases in which an accused has been committed without a charge. But the power is strictly limited to the cases specified in the section, viz., cases in which a person is committed for trial without a charge or with an imperfect or erroneous charge².

It is competent to the Sessions Judge to amend the charge even after the commencement of the trial (see S. 227). But it is his duty before the commencement of the trial to scrutinize the charges and to amend them if necessary under this section³. When the

Emperor (Any amendment which is in aid of the section)

Sessions Judge finds the charges framed by the committing Magistrate imperfect in any way, it is his duty to amend them under this section and not acquit the accused⁴

The Sessions Judge has power under the section to "frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge as the case may be" He can totally reject a charge framed by the Magistrate and substitute a new charge in its place⁵ (See illustration 1) He can also add a charge to that framed by the committing Magistrate⁶ (See illustration 2) However, an Assistant Sessions Judge, while cancelling the charge framed by the committing Magistrate and framing a new charge, is not entitled to omit framing a charge for a more serious offence, such as murder, and to frame the charge for a less serious offence, such as abduction under s 364, Penal Code, in order to acquire jurisdiction, and if he does so through a misapprehension of the evidence, he fails to exercise a proper discretion in the matter⁷

The added charge need not be related to the original charge⁸ But it is on the facts disclosed on the evidence before the committing Magistrate and on those facts alone that any action under this section can be taken⁹ Further, the section refers to a case where the charge is defective at the time of commitment. Hence, an amendment or addition cannot be made under this section on the basis of additional evidence taken by the committing Magistrate under S 219 after commitment¹¹

In an offence involving several persons some of them are first committed to the sessions the others having absconded. But before the trial in the Sessions Court commences, the remaining persons are also arrested and committed to the same Sessions Court by a different Magistrate for the same offence committed in the course of the same transaction. In such a case it is open to the Court of Session to club together the separate charges framed against the two sets of accused and frame a single charge against them under this section so as to try them jointly under s 239 (a). The fact that in framing a single charge against all the accused the Court of Session would be acting on evidence taken in the course of two different commitment enquiries is no bar to such a course¹². But where the accused are tried jointly without the charge being re framed under this section but after the separate charges are read out and explained to the accused the omission to frame a single charge is only an irregularity which is curable under s 537¹³.

The power of the Sessions Judge to frame a charge under this section is not fettered by the fact that a complaint in respect of the offence for which he proposes to frame a charge has been dismissed by the Magistrate¹⁴. But he cannot substitute a charge of adultery for one of rape framed by the Magistrate the reason being that under s 199 a charge of adultery cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court except upon a complaint of the husband or other persons mentioned therein¹⁵ (Compare s 230). The Sessions Judge has no power under the section to order the Magistrate to re draw the charges¹⁶.

Where a case was remanded to a Court of Session by the High Court for trial on certain charges it was held that the High Court did not intend to fetter the discretion of the Sessions Judge to amend the charges in any way he might think necessary¹⁶.

The fact that additional charges are framed by the Sessions Court does not make the questions at issue in the sessions trial and in the preliminary inquiry substantially different and under s 33 of the Evidence Act the evidence of witnesses who gave evidence in the preliminary inquiry and subsequently died may be admitted in the sessions trial¹⁷.

The section gives the widest possible powers to the Clerk of the Crown to revise or re-draft charges but he has no power to withdraw a charge on the ground that there is no evidence to go to the jury and that therefore the charge would fail. That is a judicial act which can only be performed by the Court¹⁸ (See s 273).

3 "Without a charge" — This section applies inter alia to cases in which a person is committed for trial without a charge. For instance a commitment under s 437 or s 596 may be made without framing a charge¹. In such cases the Court of Session may itself frame a charge. It has been held that the expression applies not only to cases in which no charge has been framed at all by the committing Magistrate but also to cases in which a charge has been framed by him but there is no charge in respect of the offence which the Sessions Judge may think the prisoner ought to be tried for.²

4 "With an imperfect or erroneous charge" — The word 'imperfect' implies defect in form.¹ The expression covers an imperfection due to a misjoinder of charges.³ In the undermentioned case³ it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the fact that the evidence recorded by the committing Magistrate is such as to justify an additional head of charge being included does not make the charge as framed imperfect or erroneous and that the Sessions Court has no power under the section to add a charge. But this view, it is submitted, is not correct. See under Note 2.

227.* (1) Any Court may alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced, or, in the case of trials before the Court of Session or High Court, before the verdict of the jury is returned or the opinions of the assessors are expressed.

(2) Every such alteration or addition shall be read and explained to the accused.

1 Legislative changes — The words 'or add to' in sub s (1) were for the first time introduced in the present Code.

2 Scope of the section — Section 226 applies to Sessions Courts and High Courts and is intended to apply to alterations or additions to the charge at the commencement of the trial. This section applies to all Courts and is intended to apply to alterations or additions to the charge during the course of the trial.¹ In either case however, the alterations or additions must be based on the facts disclosed by the evidence re-

*recorded*² the materials on which the Court acts under S 226 being the evidence recorded before the committing Magistrate and the one on which the Court acts under this section being the evidence *recorded before itself*³

There are certain cases in which it is not necessary to amend the charge and the accused can be convicted of an offence though he was not charged with it⁴ See Ss 237 and 2 s.

The word alter in the section includes a power to withdraw a charge⁵

3 "Or add to"—These words were absent in the corresponding sections of the old Codes and there was a conflict of opinions as to whether the word alter included the addition of a new charge¹ It is now clear that a new charge may be added to the original charge even if it be unconnected in any way with the latter² In the latter case however, the trial cannot proceed forthwith but the Court should proceed under S 229

4 "May"—Discretion of Court—The word may shows that the Court has a large discretion to alter or add to a charge framed under the Code¹ In fact the Magistrate must be ever ready, as the facts of the case are disclosed to either alter or add to the charge or to refer the case under S 317² It often happens that in the course of the evidence an offence more aggravated than the one complained of is discovered, and in such cases it is the duty of the Court to charge the accused with the more aggravated offence.³ The discretion is however, a judicial one and must not be exercised arbitrarily.

The powers of the Court under this section are very wide and can be exercised even if the alteration of the charge leads necessarily to the discharge of the jury which has already been sworn in and empanelled.⁴

The section does not warrant the striking out of a charge for the purpose of curing an illegality which had already been committed and does not enable the Court to proceed on those charges only that have been legally joined.⁵ Thus where the accused was charged with more than three offences committed in the course of a year, it was held that the trial was in contravention of S 234 and that the illegality could not be cured by striking out the charges so as to reduce the number to three.⁶

Where however a charge is properly framed but it is found after taking evidence that it is groundless it has been held that the Court is not prevented from striking out such charge.⁷

The alteration or addition of a charge must be for an offence made out by the evidence recorded in the course of the trial before the Court.⁸ In *Brenda Lal Bhardwaj v Emperor*⁹ it was observed

Where an offence cannot be taken cognizance of without a complaint as required in s. 175 and 177 of the Code, the Court cannot under s. 239 convict a person for such offence where there is no such complaint. It follows that in the absence of a complaint a charge cannot be altered into a charge for an offence which requires such complaint.¹¹

It will not be a sound exercise of discretion under this section to add a serious charge after the defence evidence is heard and proceed with the case without allowing further time to the accused.¹² Again where the charge is of a compoundable offence and the parties file a compromise the Court should stay further proceedings and not frame charges subsequent to the application for leave to compromise.¹³

The words 'return of the verdict' in the section mean the return of the final verdict which the Judge is finally bound to record.² The Judge has a discretion under s 303 to question the jury as to the grounds of their verdict and no verdict can be said to be returned and finally recorded until the last of the questions has been answered.³ See also s 301 Note 3

7 Amendment of charge after remand — It was held in the undermentioned cases¹ that the Court could after remand by the superior Court amend the charge, and that the remand order could not be intended to fetter this power

7a Amendment by Court of Session — A Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction and though it is vested with large powers for amending and adding to charges it can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.² See also Notes on s 296

8 Application for alteration of charges — An application for the alteration of or addition to the charge should be made as early as possible¹ and in jury cases before the jury is chosen.² Orders on such applications should be passed at the same time and not be postponed.³ The Court may refuse to entertain an application for amendment of a charge if made at a very late stage of the case.⁴ It may also be noted that in determining whether any error or omission in a charge has occasioned a failure of justice within the meaning of s 537, the Court should have regard to the fact whether the objection could or should have been taken at an earlier stage in the proceedings

9 Amendment—How made — Amendments in a charge ought to be made formally, and should appear on the face of the record.¹ When a Magistrate amends a charge he should not write over the original charge but should leave it on the file for reference if necessary and should write the new charge separately and correctly date it.²

11. Sub section (2) — For similar provisions requiring the charge to be read and explained, see ss. 210, 235 and 271.

This section deals with the alteration and addition of charges. The alterations must be read and explained to the accused who must know what he is charged with and what offence he has to answer. If the alteration is not read and explained to the accused and he is prejudiced in his defence, the conviction is illegal.¹ But where the accused was defended by a counsel who was asked whether he wanted a new trial and the latter did not want it, it was held that the accused was not prejudiced by the omission of the Judge to read and explain the alteration in the charge.² Since the object of the provision is that the accused should have notice of any charge that he has to meet he should not be called upon to meet additional charges without notice nor should he be convicted under charges different from those which he was called upon to meet.³

13 Revision — As has been seen already the section confers a discretion on the Court to allow amendment of a charge. A Court of appeal or revision would always be slow to interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless it has been exercised perversely or arbitrarily. Thus where the trial Court refused to alter the charge on the ground that the re-casting of charges would embarrass the jury and possibly prejudice the accused in his trial, it was held that it could not be said that such reason was capricious or involved any disregard of legal principles and that therefore the High Court would refuse to interfere.

This section deals with the alteration and addition of charges. The alterations must be read and explained to the accused who must know what he is charged with and what offence he has to answer. If the alteration is not read and explained to the accused and he is prejudiced in his defence, the conviction is illegal.¹ But where the accused was defended by a counsel who was asked whether he wanted a new trial and the latter did not want it, it was held that the accused was not prejudiced by the omission of the Judge to read and explain the alteration in the charge.² Since the object of the provision is that the accused should have notice of any charge that he has to meet, he should not be called upon to meet additional charges without notice nor should he be convicted under charges different from those which he was called upon to meet.³

12. Appeal. — As to whether it is open to the Government to prefer an appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge refusing to amend or add new charges see S 417, Note 7.

13. Revision. — As has been seen already, the section confers a discretion on the Court to allow amendment of a charge. A Court of appeal or revision would always be slow to interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless it has been exercised perversely or arbitrarily. Thus where the trial Court refused to alter the charge on the ground that the re-casting of charges would embarrass the jury and possibly prejudice the accused in his trial, it was held that it could not be said that such reason was capricious or involved any disregard of legal principles and that therefore the High Court would refuse to interfere.

trial immediately will not prejudice the accused or the prosecution. This section provides for the procedure to be followed in cases in which the amendment of the charge is of such a nature that proceeding immediately with the trial of the case will prejudice the prosecution or the accused. It provides that in such a case the trial should be adjourned or a retrial should be held¹. Such retrial can be directed by the trying Court itself and there is no need to refer the case to the High Court for this purpose². Where it is doubtful whether proceeding immediately with the trial will prejudice the accused the Court must lean in favour of holding that such procedure will prejudice the accused³. Where the accused has not been given a proper opportunity of defending himself against the altered charge the proceedings can be set aside and a retrial ordered⁴.

230. If the offence stated in the new or altered or added charge is one for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary, the case shall not be proceeded with until such sanction is obtained, unless sanction has been already obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded

1 Scope of the section — There are some cases in which before an offence can be taken cognizance of by a Court it is necessary to obtain the sanction of the Provincial Government or of some other authority (See for instance ss 196 196A and 197). Hence where a charge is amended or a new charge is framed and the new or altered charge relates to an offence for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary the trial cannot be proceeded with till such sanction is obtained¹. But if sanction has already been obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded fresh sanction is not necessary². If however the facts on which

A request to summon a fresh witness under this section can only be refused on the ground that the evidence of the witness is not thought by the Court to be material⁶

The section applies to all cases where a charge is altered or added to after the commencement of a trial. Thus even where a charge is amended under the directions of the High Court, the Court is bound to allow the examination mentioned in the section⁷. But where in the course of a trial the Magistrate alters the charge and decides to commit the case to the sessions under s 317 the proceedings before the Magistrate should be only treated as commitment proceedings and not as a trial and the provisions of this section do not apply to them⁸.

232. (1) If any Appellate Court, or the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision or of its powers under Chapter XXVII, is of opinion that any person convicted of an offence was misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge, it shall direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner it thinks fit

(2) If the Court is of opinion that the facts of the case are such that no valid charge could be preferred against the accused in respect of the facts proved, it shall quash the conviction

Illustration

A is convicted of an offence, under s 196 of the Indian Penal Code upon a charge which omits to state that he knew the evidence which he corruptly used or attempted to use as true or genuine was false or fabricated. If the Court thinks it probable that A had such knowledge and that he was misled in his defence by the omission from the charge of the statement that he had it it shall direct a new trial upon an amended charge, but, if it appears probable from the proceedings that A had no such knowledge it shall quash the conviction

1 Scope of the section — This section provides for the procedure to be followed in cases where a person is convicted of an offence and the Appellate Court or the High Court is of the opinion that he has been misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge. The section provides that in such cases a re-trial may be ordered on an amended charge¹. Thus where an accused is charged with one offence and convicted of a different offence without a charge being framed in respect of it, a re trial can be ordered if it is found that he has been misled in his defence by the absence of a charge.² Similarly, where a charge is framed in the alternative form in a case in which the Code does not authorize the charge to be framed in such a form and the accused is thereby misled into pleading guilty to one of the offences instead of pleading not guilty to both the charges, a re trial may be ordered.³ So also, s 221, sub section (7) requires that where a previous conviction of the accused is intended to be used for the purpose of enhancing the sentence, the charge should specifically allege the previous conviction. If the charge omits to do so and, notwithstanding the omission, the accused, on conviction, is awarded higher punishment, the sentence is liable to be reduced on appeal.⁴

But where the accused has not been misled in his defence by the absence of the charge or the error in the charge, this section does not apply and the defect in the proceedings does not afford sufficient ground for ordering a re trial.⁵ The fact that the accused was defended by a pleader who did not raise any objection to the proceedings is a factor to be considered while determining the question of prejudice to the accused⁶

Where a re trial is ordered under this section, it must be from the point at which the irregularity occurred and not from the very beginning⁷

The power of ordering a re trial is not confined to this section. Such a power is also conferred by S 423. This section refers to cases in which the accused has been convicted, while under S 423 a re trial can be ordered even in cases where the accused has been *acquitted*⁸. Similarly, under S 423 a re trial can be ordered on grounds wider than those mentioned in this section. Thus under S 423 a re trial can be ordered on the ground that the accused had no proper opportunity of defending himself⁹ (though the charge may be unexceptionable)

Sub-section (2) provides that the Appellate Court or the High Court as the case may be shall quash the conviction when it comes to the conclusion that on the facts proved, no criminal charge can be laid against the accused.¹⁰ See also the undermentioned case¹¹ where the Court declined to make an order for re trial on the ground that the punishment already suffered by the accused was sufficient

1. Joinder of charges and joint trials — The law on the subject of joinder of charges and joint trials is contained in ss 233 to 239. Before the Code of 1872 there were no provisions corresponding to these, and the strict rules of the English Common Law as to the joinder of charges and joint trials were being followed. By ss 452 to 459 of the Code of 1872, which are reproduced with slight modifications in the present Code as sections 233 to 239, the Legislature considerably widened the powers of the Court as regards joinder of charges and joinder of defendants¹

1. Joinder of charges and joint trials — The law on the subject of joinder of charges and joint trials is contained in Ss 233 to 239. Before the Code of 1872 there were no provisions corresponding to these, and the strict rules of the English Common Law as to the joinder of charges and joint trials were being followed. By Ss 452 to 458 of the Code of 1872, which are reproduced with slight modifications in the present Code as sections 233 to 239, the Legislature considerably widened the powers of the Court as regards joinder of charges and joinder of defendants¹.

exception? (See Note 1) The exceptions provided for are only empowering sections and must be strictly construed and applied so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by this section. As to whether the exceptions are mutually exclusive or not, see S 233 Note 2.

The object of the section (which has been enacted for the benefit of the accused)⁵ is requiring that there shall be a separate charge for every distinct offence and a separate trial for every charge is twofold: firstly to give the accused notice of the charges which he has to meet and secondly to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another.⁶ Another object is to prevent the mind of the Court from being prejudiced against the accused if he were tried in one trial upon different charges arising on different evidence. In other words, the object is to prevent the inconvenience of having to try of such a number of instances or culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to the Judge and to the accused.⁷

This section applies not only to original trial but also to an Appellate Court in sitting in finaling under s 42 or in the trial of two appeals arising out of two separate cases.⁸

235 and 236 apply to cases where one person may be dealt with at one trial for more than one offence, while S. 239 applies to the trial of more persons than one jointly.⁶

The principles as to joinder of charges and joint trial of accused persons embodied in ss. 233 to 239 are applicable to the trial of even summons cases⁷ and to inquiries under S. 107⁸

Sections 233 to 239 refer only to the trial of the accused and not to a preliminary inquiry before a committing Magistrate and, therefore, no objection can be taken to the commitment on account of any misjoinder of charges or joint inquiry.⁹ See also Note 6.

The test whether a trial is or is not bad due to misjoinder of charges is not the number of offences of which the accused has been convicted but number of offences with which he has been charged. It is the multiplicity of charges which vitiates the trial and prejudices the accused in his defence¹⁰

For a discussion on the question whether the exceptions under Ss 234 to 239 are mutually exclusive, see S 239, Note 2.

Where at the time of framing charges in a warrant case the Magistrate finds that to frame charges against all the accused will lead to a misjoinder of charges, he can, in the exercise of his inherent power, order that there should be a new trial in regard to some of the accused and is not bound to frame charges against them also at that stage¹¹

2 Scope and object of the section. — The provisions of this section are mandatory¹ and must be strictly applied² Separate trial is the rule and joint trial the

exception³ (See Note 1) The exceptions provided for are only empowering sections and must be strictly construed and applied so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by this section⁴ As to whether the exceptions are mutually exclusive or not, see S. 239, Note 2

The object of the section (which has been enacted for the benefit of the accused)⁵ in requiring that there shall be a separate charge for every distinct offence and a separate trial for every charge is twofold firstly to give the accused notice of the charges which he has to meet and secondly, to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another⁶ Another object is to prevent the mind of the Court from being prejudiced against the accused if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting on different evidence⁷ In other words, the object is to prevent the inconvenience of hearing together of such a number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to the Judge and to the accused⁸

This section applies not only to original trials but also to an Appellate Court in altering a finding under S 423⁹ or in the trial of two appeals arising out of two separate cases.¹⁰

3 Distinct offences — Illustration — The words "distinct offence" in the section mean, as the illustration to the section shows, offences which have no connexion with each other¹ The following are illustrations of distinct offences

4 Separate charges — For every distinct offence of which any person is accused, a separate charge should be framed¹ and this rule applies even though the case is one in which the accused may be tried at one trial for all the offences under the provisions of s 234 235 236 and 237.

5 Non compliance with the section — In *Subramanaya Iyer v King Emperor*¹ in which a person was tried on an indictment charging him with fortyone acts extending over a period of two years it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that this was plainly in contravention of s 234 of the Code and that the defect was one which could not be cured by s 537. Their Lordships observed as follows

Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law, could have been joined together in one indictment. The illustration to the section itself sufficiently shows what was meant.

The remedying of mere irregularities is familiar in most systems of jurisprudence but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted, this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity"

The question has arisen as to how far this decision is applicable to a disobedience of the directions of this section. The section directs two things namely

- (1) that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, and
- (2) that every such charge shall be tried separately unless the case falls within the classes of cases mentioned in Ss 234 235 236 and 239

Where a single charge is framed for several distinct offences and a single trial is held in respect of such charge and the case does not fall within Ss 234 235 236 or 239 there is a non compliance both as regards the framing of the charge and as regards the mode of trial. Where separate charges are framed for the distinct offences but a single trial is held in respect of all such charges and the case is not governed by Ss 234, 235, 236 or 239, there is a non compliance with the section as to the mode of trial. Where a single charge is framed for several distinct offences and a single trial is held in respect of such charge and the case falls within Ss 234 235 236 or 239 there is a non compliance as regards the framing of the charge but not with regard to the mode of trial. A non compliance of the first kind is governed by the rule enunciated in Subramaniya Iyer's case and is an illegality not cured by s 537² so also is a non compliance of the second kind³. But a non

Where separate charges are framed for the distinct offences but a single trial is held in respect of all such charges and the case is not governed by Ss 234 235 236 or 239 there is a non compliance with the section as to the mode of trial. Where a single charge is framed for several distinct offences and a single trial is held in respect of such charge and the case falls within Ss 234 235 236 or 239 there is a non compliance as regards the framing of the charge but not with regard to the mode of trial. A non compliance of the first kind is governed by the rule enunciated in Subramanya Iyer's case and is an illegality not cured by S 537² so also is a non compliance of the second kind³. But a non

In the undermentioned case the accused had committed three offences. Two were under s 403 Penal Code committed in the course of the same transaction while the third was under s 467 Penal Code. There were three separate charges for these offences. The accused pleaded guilty to the third charge and therefore the trial proceeded only on the first and second charge. It was held that no illegality was committed as there were three separate charges and the trial proceeded only in respect of the first two which could be tried jointly under s 223 of this Code.

6 Counter-cases — The joint trial of two parties arrayed against each other in a riot at one and the same trial is altogether illegal and void under this section¹. It cannot be held that the offences in such cases are committed in the course of the same transaction as the accused have not been acting in pursuance of a *common purpose*² (See S 239 Note 8). It has been held that even committals in such cases should be made separately and not all together though it is in the power of the Sessions Judge to try them separately in spite of the joint committal³. Nor can the evidence for the prosecution in one case be used as evidence for the defence in the other case and *vice versa*⁴. It has however been held that unless the accused has been prejudiced by reason of the evidence in the cross case being acted upon the trial should not be set aside⁵.

A simultaneous trial of a case and a counter case is not a joint trial and is not prohibited by the Code.

A simultaneous trial in certain cases and in certain circumstances might be irregular and improper but that would not entitle the accused to have the whole trial set aside unless the procedure adopted had prejudiced him in his defence⁶. The proper course to pursue is to give each party or faction a separate trial so as to enable its several members to be examined as witnesses in the case in which they are the complainants⁷

The question as to which case ought to be taken first, depends upon the circumstances of each case. For instance, the case against a person should be taken up first before the case in which he is the complainant, as it is not fair to force a person to throw himself open to cross examination by the other side,⁸ or again if one case looks on its face stronger than the other, it can be heard first⁹. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the procedure to be followed. There is nothing irregular in the Judge trying each case to its conclusion and then pronouncing judgment in both. But it is necessary that —

- (1) the trial should be separate and the judgments should be separately delivered,
- (2) the conclusion in each case must be founded on, and only on, the evidence in that case, and,
- (3) the Judge must keep his hands free and not commit himself to a decision one way or another and must detach himself from extraneous considerations¹⁰

See also the undermentioned cases¹¹

Again, simultaneous trials of the two cases before two different Courts over one and the same occurrence are undesirable and both cases should be tried by one Magistrate or Judge one after the other¹²

1 Legislative changes

Changes made in the Code of 1882 —

The words "committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences" were substituted for the words "committed within one year of each other" occurring in the Code of 1879

* Code of 1898, original S 234

234 (1) When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences he may be charged with and tried at one trial for any number of them not exceeding three

(2) Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or of any special or local law

Code of 1882 — Section same as original section of 1898 Code

Code of 1872 S 453

453 When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within one year of each other he may be charged and tried at the same time for any number of them not exceeding three

Explanation — Offences are said to be of the same kind under this section if they fall within the provisions of section four hundred and fifty five

Code of 1861 — Nil.

- 1 In sub s (1) after the words "such offences" the words "whether in respect of the same person or not" have been inserted
- 2 The proviso to sub s (2) is added

2. Section applies to trials and not to committals. — The section refers to a trial and not to a commitment. So, where an accused is committed to trial on more than three charges, the commitment is not illegal, as the Sessions Judge can limit the trial to three charges only.¹ See also s 233, Note 1.

3 "Person," if includes "persons" — See Note 5a on S 239

4. "Whether in respect of the same person or not." — Before the amendment of 1923, there was a conflict of opinions as to whether the section was applicable to cases of offences committed against several persons, one set of cases holding that it applied only when the offences were committed against the same person¹ and another set holding that there was no such restriction and that it applied in all cases, whether the offences were committed against the same person or against different persons.² The addition of the words "whether in respect of the same person or not" has removed this conflict and a person can now be charged for offences of the same kind not exceeding three within a year even if they were committed against several persons.³

5 "More offences than one." — The section applies only where a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind, and not where he is charged with only one offence. A trial for such offence is not barred even though such offence is based upon various acts which by themselves are offences, and which extend beyond a period of one year. In other words the word 'offence' in the section is not intended to include every act so connected with that offence as to form part of the same transaction.¹

1. A is charged with an offence under S 401 of the Penal Code. It is based on several offences of theft and various acts of association extending over more than one year. The trial is not laid under this section. The reason is that the gist of the offence under S 401 is association for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery and habit is to be proved by the aggregate of acts extending, it may be, over many years.²
2. A is charged with the offence of waging war under S 121 of the Penal Code, based upon seventeen separate incidents ranging over a period of fifteen months. The trial is not laid inasmuch as the offence under S 121 is a single continuing offence.³
3. A is charged with the offence of falsification of accounts under S 477A, Penal Code. Prosecution is not restricted to only three instances of falsification but any number of false entries or omission of entries may be proved.⁴

The section refers to 'offences' and limits the trial to three offences. 'An offence' is defined in S 4 (o) as an act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. A single act or omission will be only one offence though chargeable under several sections of the Penal Code. Thus, the printing of a seditious article on a particular date is only one offence though the accused may be charged therefor under ss 124A and 124B. The printing of another article of a similar nature on another date is another offence chargeable under the same two sections and of the same nature as the first. The two offences can, therefore, be tried together at one trial under this section.⁵ This section does not allow a single trial in respect of two transactions of the same kind, each of such transactions being made up of offences of different kinds. Thus, when A was charged (1) with abetting of forgery in respect of the service of summons alleged to have been served on 21st October 1914, (2) with swearing a false affidavit with regard to the service of such summons, (3) with abetment of forgery in respect of the service of summons alleged to have been served on 22nd January 1915, and (4) with swearing a false affidavit as to the service of the latter summons, it was held that S 234 did not apply and that the trial was bad,⁶ inasmuch as there were four offences not of the same kind, though there were two transactions of the same kind, namely, in respect of the two summonses. The section bars only a single trial of more than three offences of the same kind committed within the space of a year. It does not mean that if the accused had committed fifty offences in the course of twelve months, only three shall be tried and the rest abandoned. He may be tried in batches of three at each trial under separate charges.¹⁰ Further, the section merely authorises a combination of three offences in one trial. It does not bar a separate trial of the accused for each separate offence.¹¹ Moreover, the effect of the section is not to make the three offences, which are tried together under its provisions, one offence. The offences continue to be separate though there is only one trial for all of them.¹²

7. "Not exceeding three."—An accused can, under the section be charged and tried at one trial for offences of the same kind not exceeding three. A trial for more than three offences committed during the year is contrary to the provisions of this section, and

This section must be read subject to the special provisions of sub section (2) of S 222 with regard to the offences of criminal breach of trust and dishonest misappropriation of money, as to which, see S 222 and the Notes thereon

8 Offences of the same kind — This section applies only where a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind It does not apply where a person is accused of offences which are not of the same kind such as criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts¹ The provisions of the section cannot be evaded by the omission to name the offences and sections of the statute in the charge where in fact the accused has been charged with two offences which are not of the same kind²

Sub section (2) provides that in order that offences may be of the same kind, they should be punishable —

1. Scope of the section. — This section is another exception to the rule in S 233 that there should be a separate trial for every offence charged. Where the case falls within this section, a single trial for more offences than one is legal. The exception only extends, however, to the trial and not to the framing of charges. The general rule that every offence should be charged separately applies though there may be one trial for all such offences under the provisions of the section¹. See also Notes 4 and 5 on S 233.

Separate trial for different offences being the rule and joint trial the exception,² the burden of proof is on the prosecution to show that the case falls within the exceptions to the general rule³.

2 "Same transaction" — Sub section (1) — Sub section (1) provides that an accused person may be charged with and tried at one trial for any number of offences which he is alleged to have committed in one series of acts so connected together as to form part of the same transaction.¹ The expression same transaction has however, not been defined in the Code. From its very nature the word transaction is incapable of exact definition and appears to have been purposely used because it has this quality.² It should be interpreted not in any special or technical way but in its ordinary etymological meaning³ of an affair or a carrying through.⁴ The Court may also look for guidance to the illustrations to the section remembering however that those illustrations are not exhaustive.⁵ In *Imperator v Sharufali*⁶ it was observed that the real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are connected together so as to form one transaction depends upon whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose, or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts as to constitute one continuous

Prasad v. Emperor. (Although several items of defalcation necessarily constitute one transaction, each act may be completely separate from the others. If the acts of criminal breach of trust by themselves cannot be regarded as connected or if the acts of falsification by themselves cannot be regarded as connected, there cannot be such connexion between the series of acts as a whole as to constitute one transaction. But if there exists such connexion between the acts of criminal breach of trust on the one hand and the acts of falsification on the other as to constitute in law one offence in each case, all these acts constitute a series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, for the connection between the falsification regarded as a whole and the criminal breach of trust regarded as a whole is obvious particularly when the definite allegation is that the falsification alleged was designed to further the criminal breach of trust alleged. Where the common object of an unlawful assembly was to beat and extort money from a person and people from a neighbouring village come to rescue him but were chased back and the tiles of their houses in that village were broken and the people of another village who came to remonstrate against such action were assaulted, it was held that the assault of the second batch of villagers was not because they interfered with the extortion and beating but because of their interference with the breaking of the tiles of houses in another village and hence it was a separate transaction and could not be tried jointly with the offence under Ss 147 and 384/511, Penal Code) time between several acts will not necessarily constitute the acts parts of the same transaction,⁹ on the other hand, the mere fact that there are intervals of time between the various acts will not necessarily import want of continuity;¹⁰ though the length of the interval may be an important element in determining the question of connexion between the several acts.¹¹ The transaction itself need not be a criminal transaction, an offence can be committed in the course of a transaction the aim of which is perfectly legitimate.¹² It has, however, been held in the undermentioned cases¹³ that proximity of time is also necessary in order to constitute the acts parts of the same transaction.

Although according to the test mentioned above, community of action and purpose is necessary in order to constitute the several acts, parts of the same transaction, the mere existence of some general purpose or design such as defrauding the public, is not sufficient. The purpose must be something particular and definite.¹⁴ The words "continuity of action"

do not mean merely doing the same thing or similar things continuously or repeatedly, for a recurring series of similar transactions is not according to the ordinary use of language the same transaction. The words mean the following up of some initial act through all its consequences and incidents until the series of acts or group of connected acts comes to an end either by attainment of the object or by being put an end to or abandoned. If any of those things happens and the whole process is begun over again it is not the same transaction but a new one in spite of the fact that the same general purpose may continue.¹⁵

When a person is charged with two offences and the evidence to prove the one offence is identical with that by which the other is to be established then the two must be held to have been committed in the course of the same transaction.¹⁶

It will be clear from the above discussion that the question as to what does or does not form part of the same transaction is a question of fact¹⁷ depending largely upon the circumstances of each case.¹⁸ As pointed out by Sadasiva Iyer J. in Kumaramuthu v

Different judicial minds might where the facts are complicated, arrive at different conclusions as to whether a particular complicated series of acts were committed in the same transaction or not and one can very well conceive many sets of facts which are on the border line"

Thus the offence of hiring a person to take part in a riot is a separate and distinct offence from the riot itself and ordinarily, the hiring and the riot would be separate transactions. There may, however, be circumstances which might justify the Court in holding that the alleged hiring or employing and the riot were parts of the same transaction²⁰

Where an offence is committed, the object of which is the concealment of another offence already committed or about to be committed the two would ordinarily be considered to form parts of the same transaction²¹. Thus a criminal misappropriation or a criminal breach of trust and a falsification of accounts for the purpose of concealing the former offence or a charge of murder and of causing evidence thereof to disappear, or causing separate trial for each of the offences is not illegal¹ As a matter of fact if there is a risk of embarrassing the defence a joinder of charges should not be resorted to² Nor is it necessary that the accused should be tried for all the offences committed by the same act. Thus where the accused by a speech abets an offence under S 122 of the Penal Code and by the same speech also abets the offence of dacoity, he can be tried for each of the offences under this section but as this section is controlled as regards the offence against the State under S 120 by the provisions of S 196 of the Code its operation in this case could be restricted to the offence of dacoity alone³ Similarly, where in a trial for an offence under S 235 Penal Code which was triable by a jury, charges under ss 148 and 460, Penal Code, were added on the basis of the same facts to provide for the contingency of the jury returning a verdict of not guilty on the charge under S 390 it was held that though such a course might be within the law it was against the spirit of the law which requires that the accused should not be deprived, by subterfuges of his right to trial by jury⁴ A joint trial of several offences in cases not authorised by the Code is an illegality and not merely an irregularity⁵ (See Notes on S 233)

6 "Trial" includes conviction — The word 'trial' in this section includes conviction¹

7 Sub section (2) — Where the same facts will constitute different offences, this sub section authorizes a combined trial in respect of all of them¹ Thus, where a girl of fifteen went out of her husband's hut at night and the accused seized her and took her away, the act will amount to an offence both of kidnapping and abduction and under subs (2) can be tried at one trial² But under s 71 Penal Code, the offender cannot be punished with a more severe punishment than can be awarded for any one of the offences constituted³ See also Note 15 on S 403

8 "Constitute, when combined, a different offence"—Sub section (3) — An offence of theft under s 379 of the Penal Code and an offence of taking a gift to restore stolen property under s 215 of the Penal Code cannot be said to form when combined a different offence¹ An offence under s 143 (unlawful assembly) and an offence under s 353 (assault on a public servant) may when combined, become an offence under s 147² See also the undermentioned case³

1 Scope of the section — This section and the next form another exception to the general rule enacted in S 233 that every charge shall be tried separately. They deal with a class of cases which the language of S 235 may fail to cover¹. The stage at which this section applies is before the evidence is gone into in the case, in other words, before the trial begins. If at that stage the prosecution relies on certain facts, the proof of which is in its possession and such facts give rise to an inference that the accused must have committed some one of several offences but it is not clear, in the absence of further facts, which one of them it is the case falls under this section and the next². To take an illustrative case. Suppose before the trial begins the prosecution relies on the following facts as those which can be proved in the case

(1) that certain moveable property was stolen from the house of X.

or 753 Emperor v Abdul with cases where all the facts constituting the

(2) that the accused was in possession thereof and

(3) that the accused is unable to explain such possession

These facts are not consistent with the innocence of the accused person, but give rise to an inference that he has committed some offence, and that it may either be theft punishable under s 379 of the Penal Code or the offence of receiving stolen property punishable under s 411 of the Penal Code. It is however doubtful, without further facts, which one of the said two offences he has committed. This section applies to such a case and the accused may be charged cumulatively with the offence of theft as well as of receiving stolen property or may be charged in the alternative, with the offence of theft or of receiving stolen property.³

Where a charge is framed under this section, as in the above illustration either cumulatively or in the alternative, and the trial proceeds, and on the further facts disclosed in the evidence the doubt which existed at the beginning of the trial disappears, the accused should be convicted of the offence which has been proved to have been committed by him.⁴

Where on such a charge the trial proceeds and at the end thereof the Court is still doubtful on the facts proved which one of the offences charged has been committed by the accused, though it is clear that one or other of them must have been committed, the Court should pass judgment in the alternative.⁵ The punishment in such a case is for the offence for which the lowest punishment is provided if the same punishment is not provided for all (See s 72 of the Penal Code). See also Note 10.

Where in the above illustrative case, a charge is framed for theft only, but in the evidence in the trial it is proved that the accused is guilty only of receiving stolen property, he may be convicted of the latter offence though not charged with it, inasmuch as he could, on the facts relied upon at the beginning of the trial, have been charged under this section⁶ (See s 237). The undermentioned cases⁷ have all been decided on this principle

It will be clear from the above decisions that the applicability of this section or the next depends upon the facts relied upon by the prosecution at the beginning of the trial in other words the question in each case is 'what were the facts charged?'¹⁰ Thus if the facts charged are simply that a girl under 16 years of age was forcibly taken away by the accused there may be a doubt as to whether she was kidnapped or whether she was abducted. A charge might therefore be framed under this section for both offences.¹¹ But if the facts charged are that a girl over 16 years of age was forcibly taken away by the accused the only offence for which the accused could be charged is abduction and not kidnapping.¹² There being no doubt as to which offence was committed, this section does not apply.

It follows from the principle set forth above that this section and consequently s 237 or sub s (1) of s 403 will have no application in the following cases

- (1) Where on the facts relied upon at the beginning of the trial, it appears that the accused has committed more than one offence, i.e., when he has committed distinct offences.¹³

It has been held in the undermentioned cases¹⁹ that the "doubt" in this section does not mean doubt as to facts but means "doubt" as to questions of law, such as which section of the penal law applies. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The illustrations to the section themselves show that the doubts in those cases are not doubts as to questions of law, but only as to questions of fact²⁰. To this extent, however, the proposition would be correct, namely, that the section has no application where the *facts relied upon by the prosecution are themselves in doubt*²¹. It is not necessary for the application of this section that the several offences should fall under the same chapter of the Penal Code²².

It has also been held in another class of cases that the several offences which the facts may constitute should be cognate offences²³ or offences which differ in degree by reason of the difference in intention or by reason of subsidiary aggravating circumstances²⁴. This view also, it is submitted, is not correct and is not authorised by the terms of the section.

of the series of acts postulated can be proved. At the time the charge is framed, the prosecution can never know exactly what facts they will succeed in establishing. The most promising witness may break down, or the facts may be such that the prosecution is unable to prove them. It was observed in the undermentioned cases² that the section applies only where from the evidence led by the prosecution it is doubtful which of several offences have been committed by the accused. It is submitted that this view is not correct. Such a case is really covered by s 367 sub s. (3).

See also the cases cited below³.

2 "Which of several offences"—This section applies even where the doubt is whether the accused committed one offence only or both that offence and another. Where A gives false information of theft in a house and states that he suspects B of the offence it is clear that he commits an offence under S 182 of the Penal Code but it is doubtful if the information will amount to the making of a false charge against B punishable under s 211 of the Penal Code. It has been held that this section will apply even to such cases¹.

Under the Code of 1861, a charge under the section corresponding to this section could be framed only in respect of offences under the Indian Penal Code². Under the present Code this is no longer necessary³.

3 Theft and taking illegal gratification for the return of stolen property.

— Where the facts relied upon by the prosecution are

- (1) that certain property was stolen
- (2) that A took gratification for its restoration and
- (3) that he took no steps for its restoration or to cause the offender to be apprehended, the only inference possible is that A committed an offence under s 215 of the Penal Code. It cannot be an inference that because A asked for a gratification for its return he is the thief. There being therefore no doubt such as is contemplated by the section A cannot be charged for theft along with the offence under s 215 of the Penal Code¹. If however in the above case there is the additional fact that he restored the property but did not take steps to cause the offender to be apprehended there will be a doubt as to whether he was not the

Where an accused person entered in a sale deed, executed by him, the consideration as Rs 1475 and in a subsequent suit for pre-emption stated in evidence that the consideration was only Rs 900 it was held that the Court could charge accused under S 193 or S 423, Penal Code.⁸

6 Murder and concealment of body to screen offender. — In Begu v King Emperor,¹ where the facts relied upon by the prosecution, against the accused, were that a murder had been committed and that the accused made away with the evidence of murder by removing the body for the purpose of screening the offender, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that though the charge against the accused was only under s 302 of the Penal Code, he could be convicted under s 301 of the Penal Code, if the evidence established that offence. Their Lordships observed :

' A man may be convicted of an offence, although there has been no charge in respect of it, if the evidence is such as to establish a charge that might have been made. That is what happened here. The three men who were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment were convicted of making away with the evidence of the crime by assisting in taking away the body. They were not charged with that formally, but they were tried on evidence which brings the case under s 237."

It has been held in the undermentioned case³ that where the disposal of the dead body is a separate transaction from the actual murder the conviction under both the sections 302 and 201 is legal

7. Murder, culpable homicide not amounting to murder and causing death by negligence.—Where the facts relied upon give rise to an inference of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, a charge may be framed under the section either cumulatively or alternatively¹ for murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder. In the undermentioned case,² however, it was held that this could not be done. The decision proceeded upon the view that s 236 did not apply to a "doubt" as to facts. In the cases cited below³ it was held that though a charge might under this section be framed cumulatively, it cannot be framed alternatively in respect of the two offences. It is submitted that the last two views are not correct.

8. Principal offence and the abetment thereof.—The question whether an offence and its abetment could both be charged under the provisions of this section depends, as has been seen in Note 1, on the facts relied upon by the prosecution at the beginning of the trial and on which charges are invited to be framed. A person may be convicted of abetment of an offence, even if he is charged with the substantive offence and vice versa, if the facts relied upon could have supported a charge for that offence.¹

The view taken in the undermentioned cases² that an offence of abetment and the principal offence cannot come within this section is, it is submitted, not correct.

9 Alternative charges. — A charge even in the alternative must conform to the provisions of s 233, 234, 235 or s 239 and each of the alternative charges must be a legal charge¹

Alternative charges should be framed as in form given in Sch V, No 28, sub head II² When the charges are of distinct offences such as kidnapping and abduction, it is desirable that the accused should be charged separately for kidnapping and abduction³ Omission to split up the charge into two parts does not, however, amount to material error, unless the accused is thereby prejudiced in his defence⁴

See 21-0 Note 7

10 Sentence — Where an accused is convicted of two offences alternatively, the sentence should be considered from the point of view of the maximum sentence provided for the lesser of the two alternative offences¹. This is so even where a person is charged under two parts of the same section, one carrying a higher and the other a lighter punishment*.

11. "Series of acts," meaning of —This section justifies framing of charges cumulatively or alternatively only when there is "a single act or series of acts" It cannot apply when there are more than one separate single acts or separate series of acts each of which constitutes a separate offence although it may be doubtful as to which offence will be constituted in each case¹ It has been held in the undermentioned case² that a statement made in the evidence in a civil suit and a statement made in the evidence in a criminal case cannot be considered to be a "series of acts" within the meaning of the section and that the person making such statement cannot therefore be prosecuted under this section for giving false evidence on the basis of such contradictory statements It is submitted that this view cannot be accepted as correct If, as the decision concedes, a statement before the police and a subsequent statement before the Magistrate could form a "series of acts," it is difficult to see how a statement in a civil Court and a statement in a criminal Court are not a "series of acts"

2. Scope of the section — The general rule is that an accused person cannot be convicted of an offence of which he was not charged and of which consequently he has had no notice. This section and the next are, however, two exceptions to the above rule.¹ This section enables the Court to convict a person of an offence which is disclosed in the evidence and for which he might have been charged under the provisions of section 236, although he was not charged with it. The reason of the rule is that the facts relied upon by the prosecution at the beginning of the trial, of which he has notice, are sufficient notice of all offences which such facts will constitute.

The section will apply, therefore, only in cases falling within S 236.² For cases in which a conviction has been given under this section without framing a charge therefor, see Note 1 on S 236. In cases where S 236 has no application as for instance, where the offence disclosed in evidence is distinct from the offence charged,³ or where there is no doubt on the facts which can be proved as to which of several offences the facts will constitute,⁴ this section has no application, and a conviction without a charge is not legal. The Court may in such cases frame a new charge under the provisions of Section 227 and proceed further in accordance with the provisions of Ss 228 and 229. But where, in such cases, the Court without framing a charge as it ought to have done, convicts the accused, the conviction is not ipso facto void on that ground only unless, in the opinion of the Court of appeal or revision, a failure of justice has, in fact, been occasioned thereby. See Section 535 Note 3.

The question of prejudice or failure of justice will arise, therefore, only in cases not falling within S 237 inasmuch as in cases falling under it the Court is entitled to convict the accused of an offence disclosed in the evidence, although he was not charged with it. The High Court of Calcutta has, however, in the undermentioned cases,⁵ held that, though a conviction may be legal under S 237, it may be set aside under S 535 if it has prejudiced the accused. It is submitted that this view is not correct. Section 237 clearly shows that a charge need not be framed before a conviction is given and what need not be done in law, cannot prejudice the accused. The High Court of Allahabad also has, in two cases⁶ held that Ss 227 and 237 necessarily go together, and that it is not the intention of the Legislature, even in cases coming under S 237 to empower a Court to convict a person of an offence of which he has not been told anything. The reasoning of these decisions also is not correct and is against the express wording of the section that a conviction can be given 'although he was not charged with it'. The actual decisions both of the Calcutta High Court and of the Allahabad High Court can be supported, however, on the ground that S 237 did not apply to those cases and that a conviction without a charge in cases not falling within S 237 is governed by S 535 and the question of prejudice thus becomes relevant. In the Calcutta case the offence charged and the offence of which the accused was convicted were distinct offences to which ss 236 and 237 could not apply. In the Allahabad cases there could be no doubt on the facts charged as to which of several offences such facts would constitute. See also the undermentioned case⁷.

The Chief Court of Oudh has also held that it is not illegal to convict a person of an offence under S 459, Penal Code, in a case in which he has been charged under S 373, in the light of the wording of this section and S 236 but that the question to be decided in each case is whether the accused has or has not been prejudiced in his trial by the fact that the charge was framed under the wrong section⁸.

Where a Court finds it necessary to make use of the section to convict an accused person of an offence with which he has not been charged, it should be particularly careful to formulate in its own mind the charge upon which, had it been duly framed it would be prepared to convict⁹.

2a Illustration — The illustration to the section only applies to the class of cases referred to in S 236 and does not refer to cases in which there is no doubt as to what offence has been committed on the facts relied on by the prosecution but it is merely doubtful which offence will be proved (see Note 1 on S 236). This section is, therefore, no authority for holding that in such cases on a charge of one offence, a person can be convicted of a different offence.¹

3 Conviction for offence requiring complaint by specified persons — Where a person is charged with offence A on facts on which he might have been charged also with offence B under S 236 but the latter offence is one which could not be taken cognizance of by the Court in the absence of a complaint by the aggrieved person, it has been held that he could not be convicted of offence B under this section in the absence of such complaint.²

1 Scope and principle of the section — The section contemplates a conviction of a minor offence included in the offence charged in either of two cases. The first is where the offence charged consists of several particulars a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence and such combination is proved but the remaining particulars are not proved¹. The second is where facts are proved which reduce the offence charged to a minor offence² Illustration (a) to the section is an example of the first class of cases and illustration (b), of the second³

In *In re Arumugham*⁴ the accused had inflicted a wound with a stabbing instrument in the abdomen of another person and the wound caused the death of such person. The question was whether the accused intended to kill the deceased, in which case the offence would be murder while otherwise the offence would be causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon. Discussing the applicability of this section to the case, the learned Judge observed as follows

"I think it is manifest that s 238 (1) cannot apply. The language of that sub-section is quite inappropriate to a case of this kind where the only difference between the offence of murder and the offence of causing grievous hurt is one of the degree of intention."

But the learned Judge held that the case would be covered by ss 236 and 237. The learned Judge apparently considered that the term "particulars" in sub s (1) is inappropriate to describe degree of intention. But there does not appear to be any difficulty in regarding a higher degree of guilt in the criminal's intention as containing an extra factor not contained in the lesser offence. The cases noted below⁵ are instances where murder and grievous hurt are regarded as major and minor offences so as to treat a charge for murder as including a charge for grievous hurt. At the same time such cases may also be conceived of as covered by ss 236 and 237.

The principle on which the section proceeds is that where an offence consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, the graver charge gives notice to the accused of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor offence of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when the circumstances constituting the major charge do not necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge, constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies, because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter⁶.

The section is an exception to the rule that a person cannot be convicted of an offence with which he is not charged⁷. Therefore, though under this section an accused person can be convicted of an offence different from that he was accused of, it should be done only in cases where the accused is not prejudiced in any way by the conviction on the new charge.⁸ Thus where the accused is charged under S 457 Penal Code for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft and where he denies the trespass he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass with intent to commit adultery under S 456 Penal Code because upon the case for prosecution and on the line of defence adopted by the accused the latter cannot be said to have any knowledge of the charge of which he is convicted and would therefore, be prejudiced in his defence.⁹ But where in such a case the accused himself admits trespass but states that it was with the intention of committing adultery and not theft he cannot be held to be in any way prejudiced inasmuch as in order to sustain a conviction under S 456 it is not necessary to specify any criminal intention. It is sufficient if a guilty intention is proved such as is contemplated in S 441 of the Penal Code.¹⁰

Though the section enables a Court to convict a person of a minor offence when charged with a major offence there is no provision of law which allows the converse case, i.e. the conviction for a major offence on a charge of a minor one.¹¹

The powers given by this section are not controlled by the sections of the Code which prescribe the procedure to be followed in trying the offence charged and have nothing to do with the form of the trial nor with the convicting authority.¹² Thus the section empowers a jury empanelled to try an offence triable by a jury to find as an incident that the facts proved amount to a minor offence and return a verdict of guilty or not guilty of such offence¹³ though such offence may not be triable by jury but is triable only with assessors.¹⁴

In the same way, it empowers a Court trying an accused person for an offence with the aid of assessors to convict him for a minor offence triable by jury, care should, however, be taken to frame a charge for the minor offence, where the facts indicate a reasonable possibility of the minor offence being made out, so that from the beginning the trial may proceed according to the provisions of the Code and the parties concerned may have an opportunity to object to the trial if so advised¹⁵ But the section has no application to cases where there is no conviction by the jury of the minor offence. Thus, where on a charge under s 304, Penal Code, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, but returned a verdict of "guilty but not voluntarily" under s 326, the verdict amounts to only a verdict of "not guilty" under s 326 and this section has no application to such a case¹⁶

2 "Minor offence." — The words "minor offence" are not defined anywhere in the Code and ought to be taken in their ordinary sense and not in any technical sense¹ In the undermentioned case² a single Judge of the Bombay High Court observed as follows:

"I do not think the argument relied upon is sound. It seems to me to proceed on the unwarranted assumption that the test by which an offence is deemed in s 238 (1) to be major or minor is the gravity of the punishment incurred. The sub section does not refer to the gravity of punishment at all it merely refers to the number of particulars constituting the offence. If a number of particulars is needed to constitute the offence, then for the purposes of s 238 (1), it may be called the major offence if a combination of some only of such particulars constitutes a complete offence then that offence is referred to in s 238 (1) as the minor offence. I do not overlook that s 238, sub section (2) speaks of the proof of additional facts reducing an offence to a minor offence, and this does not accord with the view that the minor offence must always consist of fewer particulars than the major offence. But this is only a new form that the situation takes."

It is submitted that the view propounded would make the word "minor" in sub s (1) superfluous, and is not correct. Further, it is not clear what is meant by the last sentence in the above passage. The gravity of the offence must no doubt depend upon the severity of the punishment that can be inflicted but the major and minor offences must be cognate offences which have the main ingredients in common³ Consequently, a man charged with one offence which is entirely of a different type from the offence which he is proved to have

Abetment — Abetment is not a minor offence having regard to the manner in which sub-s. (2A) expressly makes mention of an attempt to commit an offence and is silent as to abetment of an offence. It, therefore, cannot come under this section.⁷ See also S 236 Note 8

Rioting and unlawful assembly — A charge of rioting under S 147 or of being a member of an unlawful assembly under S 149, does not by itself or by being charged together with a charge of hurt, include as a minor offence an act of violence by an individual accused so as to authorise under this section a conviction under S 323⁸ or S 325⁹ or S 376¹⁰ or for assault under S 352¹¹ or for criminal trespass.¹² The High Court of Madras has however held that a conviction on the substantive charge only, on a charge coupled with S 149 Penal Code, is not necessarily bad, the legality of the conviction depending on rioting does not of itself connote the causing of hurt, where the charge is for rioting there can be no conviction for causing hurt. But what has to be really seen in such cases is the manner in which the charge is framed and whether the accused were aware of the accusation which they had to meet. Where a charge, though it mentioned only S 147, Penal Code also set out that in pursuance of the common object the accused beat the victim the accused could be convicted under S 323 when a conviction under S 147 was not possible owing to absence of proof against the necessary number of accused))

whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge¹³ The Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has also held that a person can be convicted of the offence of causing hurt although the charge is formulated as for the commission of an offence punishable under s 307, Penal Code, read with s 149¹⁴ The Lahore High Court was also inclined to a similar view in the case cited below¹⁵

3. Attempt — Sub-section (2A) — Under Act 18 [XVIII] of 1923, sub s (2) of s 237 has been transferred to this section and is enacted as sub s (2A), as more appropriate here than under s 237

Under this subsection, when a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although he is not separately charged with the attempt¹

But the subsection does not permit a conviction for an attempt to commit a different offence with which the accused was never charged Thus, an accused charged under s 302, Penal Code, for murdering A cannot be convicted for attempting to murder B²

4. When minor offence requires complaint — Sub-section (3). — This section must be read subject to Ss 198 and 199 which require the complaint of the aggrieved person before the Court can take cognizance of offences referred to therein

A person charged with one offence cannot, therefore, be convicted of a minor offence if the latter requires a complaint by a particular person mentioned in Ss 198 and 199 of the Code, when there is no such complaint Thus, a prosecution for adultery under s 497 or for enticing away a married woman under s 498 requires a complaint by the husband and, therefore, a person charged with rape or abduction cannot be convicted either under s 497³ or under s 498⁴ in the absence of a complaint by the husband Similarly, no conviction

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — This is the last exception to the rule enacted in S 233 that every offence must be tried separately. It is only under this section that the joint trial of several accused persons is permissible¹

The section applies only to trials and not to enquiries. It is not illegal, therefore, to jointly commit several accused persons for offences not falling within the provisions of this section,² though it should, as a matter of prudence, be avoided³

Inquiries under chap VIII stand on a somewhat different footing. Under S 117 (5), where two or more persons have been associated together in the matter under inquiry, they may be dealt with in the same or separate inquiries as the Magistrate shall think just. In the cases noted below⁴ it was held that a joint inquiry in cases not permitted by the law was illegal and not merely irregular. But there is a conflict of decisions on the point. For fuller discussion, see S 117 Notes 13 and 14

The section is subject to the rules as to jurisdiction laid down in chapter XV and consequently a Magistrate cannot try persons for offences committed outside his jurisdiction, though otherwise the case may fall within the provisions of this section⁵

The provisions of the section refer to persons accused, that is to say, charged. The provisions are, therefore, intended to deal with the position as it exists at the time of charge, and not with the result of the trial. Hence, a joint trial of several persons under this section is not vitiated merely by the fact that at the end of the trial the facts found happen to be different from those on the footing of which the charges were originally framed⁶

2 Whether Sections 234, 235, 236 and 239 are mutually exclusive

Section 239 and Ss 234 to 236 — It has been in some cases held that the provisions of this section and Ss 234 to 236 may be applied cumulatively to a case, so that where two or more persons can be jointly tried under this section for certain offences it is permissible to add as against one of such persons charges which could be added under Ss 234 to 236 if he were being tried alone

- 2 A and B commit a certain offence and as such are liable to be tried together under clause (a) of this section. There is no objection to joining against A under S 234 another charge for a different offence of the same kind committed by him in the course of the same year²

Put a contrary view has been held in the unmentioned cases.⁶

Put the provisions of this section are not controlled by ss. 231 to 23⁷ In other words the circumstances under which a joint trial is permissible under this section cannot be restricted by considerations based on ss. 231 to 23⁸

Sections 235 and 236 — Sections 235 and 236 may apply to the same case. Thus where several charges have been rightly joined against the same accused under s. 235, there can be no objection to one of such charges being in the alternative under s. 236⁹

Section 234 and Ss. 235 and 236 — A, B and C are offences of the same kind, as for example several acts of breach of trust. D is an offence which forms part of the same transaction as A, as for example, falsification of accounts to conceal the offence A. Similarly E and F are parts of the same transaction as B and C respectively. Under s. 231, A, B and C could be tried in one trial as being offences of the same kind. Under s. 235 A and D could be tried together as forming parts of the same transaction. So also, E and F and G and H. But can A, B, C, D, E and F be all tried together in the same trial by virtue of ss. 234 and 235 read together? The general view is that they cannot⁷ Where, however, several acts of misappropriation are lumped together in a single charge under s 222 (2), it has been held that the acts of falsification of accounts committed for the purpose of concealing the former offence will constitute parts of the same transaction as such offence and can be tried at the same trial⁸

Where a person is charged with several offences under s 234, it has been held in some decisions that there is no objection to his being tried on additional charges framed under s 235 (2) or s 236⁹. But the matter is involved in a conflict of decisions. These have been more fully considered in s 234 Note 5.

2a Clauses of Section 239, if mutually exclusive. — A and B commit an offence and are liable to be tried jointly under clause (a) of this section. A and C commit different offences in the course of the same transaction. They can be jointly tried for such offences under clause (d). But A, B and C cannot be jointly tried at the same trial by combining clauses (a) and (d). In this sense the clauses of this section are mutually exclusive. But they are not mutually exclusive in the sense that more than one clause may apply at the same time to a case. Thus, where A is accused of an offence and B of the abetment thereof, the case comes under clause (b), but if the offence and the abetment form parts of the same transaction, the case will also fall under clause (d)¹

3 "May be tried together" — Before the amendment of 1923, the section contained the words 'as it thinks fit,' and it was held that it was in the discretion of the Court to adopt, in each case, whichever course it regarded as most conducive to the ends of joint offence. The omission of the said words in the present section does not, however, make any difference and the words may be tried together show that it is still in the discretion of the Court to adopt whichever course it thinks best.² The manner in which this discretion may be exercised depends on the facts of each case.³ Wherever the applicability of the section is doubtful it is far better that it should not be applied than that it should.⁴ Nor should joinder of charges be resorted to when there is a risk of embarrassing the defence by such joinder.⁵ Where four offences were committed at four different places within two years and the accused fourteen in number were alleged to have taken part in one or more of them it was held that it would have been more proper to try them separately for the same offence than to try them jointly for an offence under S 400, Penal Code.⁶

An exercise of discretion under the section even if improper will not be interfered with until it has occasioned a failure of justice.⁷

4 "Accused of the same offence" — Clause (a) — The word 'offence' has been defined in S 4 (1) (o) as meaning any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. The words 'same offence' would therefore signify one and the same physical act of crime and not different acts constituting crimes called by the same name or punishable under the same section¹. Thus several persons being together in possession of the same stolen property² or several persons together subscribing their names to a false written statement³ commit the same offence. See also the undermentioned cases⁴. Where five or more persons actuated by a single motive made several attacks against certain persons it was held that they committed a single riot and not a number of separate riots⁵.

The term 'offence' under this section has been held to include minor and alternative offences⁶. See also Note 2.

In the undermentioned case⁷ when A made a false charge against X of stealing goats and next day B made a false charge against X of stealing the same goats it was held that A and B committed the same offence. It is submitted that this is not correct. A and B cannot be said to have committed the same act of crime though they may be said to have committed similar acts forming part of the same transaction. The same observations will apply to the case cited below⁸.

Where a single offence has been committed and the allegation of the prosecution is that either A or B committed the crime it cannot be said that A and B committed the same offence. They cannot therefore be tried together at one trial under this section⁹. So also where A is charged with committing murder by stabbing X while B is charged in the alternative with abetting X in stabbing X and with stabbing X himself, A and B should be tried separately.¹⁰

The section says that in the cases covered by it, several accused may be charged and tried together. When some persons accused of an offence are committed to take their trial before a Sessions Court and subsequently some absconding accused charged with having committed the same offence in the course of the same transaction are committed to take their trial before the same Court, a joint trial of the two sets of accused persons so separately committed is not illegal and without jurisdiction, provided that the joint trial has caused no prejudice to the accused and both sets of accused persons were made aware by the committing Magistrate in each case that those committed had committed the same offence jointly with the others and the evidence recorded in each enquiry discloses that the same offence was committed jointly by them all¹¹

5. Abetment and attempt — Clause (b). — Under clause (b), persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment¹ or of an attempt to commit such offence,² may be jointly tried. The trial of offenders and their accomplices would therefore come under this clause,³ so also would a trial of two persons, one for attempt to commit an offence and another for abetment of the offence.⁴

Where the principal offence and abetment constitute the same transaction a joint trial of the principal offender and abettor will also be justified under clause (a).⁵

5a. Offences of the same kind — Clause (c). — A and B are accused of jointly committing two distinct offences of the same kind but not forming part of the same transaction. Can they be tried together? Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923 there was no provision corresponding to clause (c) of the present section.

and there was a divergence of opinion on the question. According to one set of cases,¹ the words at the end of the section "and the provisions contained in the former part of this chapter shall apply to all such charges" did not refer to ss 234 to 238 but only to ss 221 to 232, that therefore the word "person" in S 234 could not be read as including "persons" that neither S 234 nor S 239 consequently applied to the case and that therefore they could not be tried together. According to another class of cases,² the words quoted above include also Ss 234 to 238, that in this view the word "person" in S 234 must be read as including "persons" and that the joint trial was not bad. Clause (c) now makes it clear that such a trial is permissible.³ For the clause to apply, the offences charged must be of the same kind⁴ and they must have been committed by the accused persons jointly.⁵

Offences under S 41 (h) and (j) of the Factories Act, 1911, are offences of the same kind within the meaning of this section.⁶

A and B are accused of two offences alleged to have been committed by them jointly in the course of the same year. In the case of each offence the charge is framed in the same alternative form, viz, for an offence under S 890 or S 411 of the Penal Code. In such a case, the offences charged cannot be said to be of the same kind, though the transactions are of the same kind.⁷ See S 234, Note 5.

6 "Same transaction" — Clauses (a) and (d).—Where A commits offence x, B commits offence y and C commits offence z, and x, y and z form parts of the same transaction, A, B and C can, at one trial, be tried for the offences x, y and z respectively.¹ There is no limit to the number of offences which can be charged when time is not essential to constitute the acts, parts of the same transaction.⁸ Nor is it necessary that the accused should have acted together from start to finish⁹ On the other hand, the mere fact that several offences of the same kind, such as dacoity, are committed at about a particular time, will not necessarily make them parts of the same transaction¹⁰

What does or does not form part of the same transaction is a question of fact in each particular case¹¹

In order to say whether several persons can be jointly tried as having committed offences forming parts of the same transaction, the Court has to look to the accusation, i.e., the prosecution case as set forth in the charges themselves, and if according to that case the offences are such as could be regarded as parts of the same transaction, it would be justified in holding a joint trial. It need not consider what the final result of the case

If several persons conspire to commit offences and commit overt acts in pursuance of the conspiracy (a circumstance which makes the act of one the act of each and all the conspirators) these acts are committed in the course of the same transaction which embraces the conspiracy and the acts done under it. The common concert and agreement which constitute the conspiracy, serve to unify the acts done in pursuance of it.

The offence of conspiracy and acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy form one and the same transaction.³ The transaction continues so long as the conspiracy continues.⁴ But separate acts of crime not committed in pursuance of the conspiracy but being isolated acts committed individually during the continuance of the conspiracy are not parts of the same transaction with the conspiracy itself and acts alleged to be the subject of the conspiracy. In other words a conspiracy and acts done in furtherance of its common object have no community with separate acts which may be committed by a conspirator for individual gain.⁵

cause hurt to each other in a fight, they cannot be tried together for the offence of causing hurt to each other⁴. The fighting cannot be considered as a "transaction"⁵. It was, however, held in the undermentioned case⁶ that, where the object of two opposite parties is to take forcible possession of the same piece of land, they could both be tried together in one trial. It is submitted that this view is not correct. It has also been held in the case cited below⁷ that a mere common purpose, e.g. to drive the complainant out of a house, is not sufficient to make two perfectly distinct offences parts of the same transaction. Where two motor buses coming from opposite directions collided and some persons were injured thereby, it was held that though the accused the drivers of the two buses, had no similar or identical purpose in view, the transaction was the same and they both could be tried together⁸.

In the undermentioned case⁹ several persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly and having in prosecution of the common object, committed various offences and they were tried jointly. In the course of the trial it was found that the common object was not established. It was held that there was no justification for a joint trial once it was found that the common unlawful object had not been established. It is submitted that the decision is incorrect, as the provisions relating to joinder are intended to deal with the position as it exists at the time of the charge and not with the result of the trial and the propriety of a joint trial depends on the case as set forth in the charges. See Note 6.

regarded as a continuous or same transaction. Reilly, J., in the same case has taken a contrary view, namely, that a continuing offence may or may not be a single transaction. Krihnan, J. to whom the case was referred on difference of opinion between these two Judges, has held that the waging of war is really a continuing offence, which begins with the first act of war and goes on till the war is ended, but the various incidents in a war may be so disconnected as to form different transactions, the question whether they form parts of the same transaction or not being one to be judged on the facts of each case.

13. Kidnapping and abduction — In the undermentioned cases,¹ a joint trial of A for an offence under S 366 and of B for an offence under S 368 has been held to be bad, while a contrary view has been taken in the cases cited below.² The question is, however really one of fact depending upon the facts of the particular case as to whether the two offences could be regarded as parts of the same transaction.

14 Keeping gaming house and using it. — It has been generally held that a person keeping a common gaming house and persons using it could be tried together as the two offences are interdependent and form a complement of each other¹

15. Charge need not refer to transaction being same.—It is not necessary that the charge should contain a statement that the transaction is one and the same. It is the tenor of the accusation and not the wording of the charge that must be considered as the test¹

16 Clause (e) — This clause was newly added in 1923. Before its introduction it was held that the joint trial for theft and receiving the stolen property was illegal unless they formed parts of the *same transaction*¹. Now such a joint trial is expressly provided for by this clause² A receiver from a receiver of stolen property should not be tried with the receiver of the property and the thieves, as the former is likely to be prejudiced by the course adopted³

This clause applies only to offences mentioned therein. An offence which includes theft means an offence of which theft is a necessary and essential ingredient⁴. So, where an accused was charged under S 413, Penal Code, with other persons who were charged under S 401, Penal Code, it was held that this clause did not apply, as an offence under S 401, Penal Code, could not be said to include theft⁵. Similarly, persons charged under Ss 457 and 460, Penal Code, are not persons charged with offences which include theft, and they cannot, therefore, be properly tried with persons charged with receiving stolen property which was stolen in a theft which was committed as part of the transaction involving the other offences⁶. But an offence of dacoity (Penal Code, S 395) includes theft and hence a joint trial of several persons for offences under Ss 395 and 412 is legal⁷. Where an accused, charged with an offence under S 360, Penal Code, and, in alternative under S 420, Penal Code, is jointly tried with a co accused who is charged with an offence under S 414 their joint trial is not illegal simply because the alternative offence under

S. 420 does not include theft.³

17 Clause (f) — This clause was newly added in 1923. As pointed out by Mullick, J., in Mt Guljania v Emperor,¹ the following cases may arise when stolen property is found in the possession of different persons

- (1) There may be one or more thefts and the several persons may have received the property jointly i.e., at one and the same time, e.g., when one person receives the property as agent of another. This case is not governed by clause (f) but independently of it, a joint trial of persons receiving stolen property is clearly permissible.²
- (2) There may be different thefts and several persons may have received the property at different times. This case also is not governed by clause (f). There is no community of purpose between the persons who have so received, and their joint trial is bad.³
- (3) There may be one theft and the several persons may have received the property at different times. Before the introduction of clause (f), it had been held in several decisions that a joint trial in such cases was illegal.⁴ Clause (f) was intended to meet such cases and a joint trial would now be permissible.⁵ The phrase, "possession of which has been transferred by one offence," refers to the original theft of stolen property and not to the transfer of possession from the thief to the person receiving stolen property⁶

The provisions of this clause cannot, however, be extended by analogy to a trial of persons accused of offences other than those specifically mentioned therein. Therefore, the joint trial of the accused both charged under S 410 Penal Code,⁷ or the joint trial of a person under S 411 Penal Code and another who has purchased the same from one of the accused,⁸ is illegal. See also the undermentioned case⁹ which falls under the same principle, viz, that the provisions of this clause cannot be extended by analogy.

18 Clause (g) — In order that persons accused of an offence under Chapter XII of the Penal Code relating to counterfeit coin can be tried under this clause with persons accused of any other offence under the same chapter, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such offence all the offences must relate to the same coin. So, where two persons are charged one with uttering a counterfeit coin and the other with being in possession of different counterfeit coins, they cannot be jointly tried together under this clause¹

19. Simultaneous trials — Simultaneous but separate trials of different accused persons for offences committed by them and not forming part of the same transaction are not bad unless the accused are prejudiced by the course adopted¹

20 Criminal breach of trust and receiving stolen property.—A person committing a criminal breach of trust and another who receives the stolen property can be tried together¹

21 Effect of illegal trial — See Note 10 on Section 537 and Note 5 on Section 233

22 Objection as to joinder — An objection as to joinder can be taken in a Court of revision or appeal though it was never taken in the Court of first instance¹

When an objection as to joint trial is made and it appears likely that the objecting parties will be prejudiced by such joint trial it is advisable for the Court to accept the objection even if the joint trial would in fact be legal²

240.* When a charge containing more heads than one is framed against the same person, and when a conviction has been had on one or more of them, the complainant, or the officer conducting the prosecution, may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw the remaining charge or charges, or the Court of its own accord may stay the inquiry into, or trial of such charge or charges. Such withdrawal shall have the effect of an acquittal on such charge or charges unless the conviction be set aside, in which case the said Court (subject to the order of the Court setting aside the conviction) may proceed with the inquiry into or trial of the charge or charges so withdrawn.

1 Scope and applicability of the section — Where a person is committed to the Court of Session on a number of charges the Sessions Judge must record some order in respect of them and should not dispose of some of the charges alone without recording any order in regard to the others¹ Under this section he can stay the trial on some of the charges or allow them to be withdrawn on conviction being had on another charge²

It has been held that this section applies only to a case where a person is accused of several distinct offences. Thus it applies to a case where there are charges of several distinct offences constituted by separate acts or series of acts like those which fall under ss 234 and 235 sub-s (1) but not where there are several charges founded on the same act as those which fall under s 235 sub-s (2) and (3) and s 236³

This section applies again only to charges framed in the same case and not to separate charges for distinct offences in different cases. Thus the prosecution cannot on conviction of the accused in one case withdraw a charge against him in another case⁴ Nor can the Court pending an appeal against the conviction in one case stay the trial of charges in respect of other cases⁵ As to withdrawal of charges by the Court see Notes on S 227

2 "Conviction has been had" — The section contemplates a withdrawal or stay of trial of charges only when a conviction has been had on one or more of them. So where a person is charged with murder under S 302 of the Penal Code and with causing disappearance of the evidence of murder under S 201 Penal Code but before the trial begins in the Court of Session the Public Prosecutor withdraws the charge for the offence under S 201 Penal Code this section has no application to such a case. A trial on the charge under S 201 Penal Code could not therefore be proceeded with under this section when the conviction of the charge under S 302 Penal Code is set aside on appeal¹

3 "On one or more of them" — Where a person is convicted on one or more of the charges against him it is only before the other charges are tried that they could be withdrawn. But when all the charges have been tried and the accused found guilty no withdrawal can be made of any charge. In such cases if the Court considers a certain term of imprisonment adequate to meet the offence under each head the practice is not to convict on one head and drop the others but to convict on each head and pass concurrent sentences.¹ See also S 35 Note 10 and S 397 Note 3

4 "With the consent of the Court" — The word Court in the section is not restricted merely to the trial Court but includes every grade of Court including the High Court in revision and in appeal. Thus when a charge containing more heads than one is framed against the same person and he had been convicted on one or more of them and the complainant applies in revision praying for infliction of sentence on the others but subsequently withdraws the application the withdrawal amounts to the withdrawal of the complaint with regard to such charges with the consent of the Court¹. Again where an accused is charged with an offence under S 408 Penal Code in respect of ten receipts and is tried and convicted in respect of three of them the High Court's direction in the appeal that no further proceedings be taken in respect of the other receipts amounts to a stay of the trial with regard to those charges within the meaning of this section²

5 Effect of withdrawal or stay of trial — A withdrawal of charges¹ or a stay of enquiry or trial thereof² under this section has the effect of an acquittal on such charge or charges unless the conviction be set aside³. If the conviction is set aside the Court

2 Joint trial of summons and warrant cases — Where there is a joint trial of two offences, one of which is triable as a summons case and the other as a warrant case, the Magistrate must follow the procedure of warrant cases with regard to both the offences,¹ the reason being that, in such cases, the procedure applicable to the graver charge should be followed in preference to the more summary procedure appropriate to the less serious offence See also Section 247, Note 2

3. Applicability of Chapter XIX of the Code to the trial of summons-cases — The principles underlying the provisions of chapter XIX apply to the trial of summons cases also though there is no provision for the framing of a formal charge in such cases.¹

5 Commitment to sessions — See Notes on Section 347

6 Change of procedure at what stage permissible. — In *Rajaratnam Pillai v Emperor*¹ it was held by King J., of the High Court of Madras that once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence as a summons case, he cannot afterwards take cognizance of an offence which is triable as a warrant case and change the procedure accordingly. The same learned Judge, in the undermentioned case,² observed that the above proposition as stated by himself lacked in precision and held that a Magistrate can, before he begins to inquire into a summons case, reconsider the offence disclosed by the complaint and, if necessary, adopt the procedure provided for warrant cases. But in a later case³ of the same High Court, Burn, J., held that if a Magistrate begins a trial as a summons case and then finds that an offence triable only under warrant case procedure has been committed, he is bound to apply warrant case procedure thenceforward. Where the complaint alleges an offence triable under the warrant case procedure but the Magistrate considers that the offence is only a minor offence to which the summons-case procedure could be applied it is open to him to adopt a summons case procedure and he may proceed with the case as if the complaint was one of the minor charge only⁴.

Substance of accusation to be stated Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge

1 Scope of the section. — This section which relates to the commencement of the trial of a summons case may be compared with the corresponding provisions relating to the trial of warrant cases and sessions trials. In the trial of a summons-case, the particulars of the offence are stated to the accused and his plea is recorded at the very commencement of the trial, whereas in warrant cases, the trial commences with the taking of the evidence for the prosecution, and the framing of the charge and recording of the accused's plea are postponed till after the prosecution evidence has been recorded. In this respect the commencement of a sessions trial resembles that of a summons case rather than that of a warrant case because in sessions trial also (S 271) the charge is read and explained to the accused and his plea is recorded at the very commencement of the trial.

The primary object of the proceeding prescribed by this section is to determine whether the accused pleads guilty to the charge or demands to be tried.¹

2 "When the accused appears" — As to the right of the accused to appear in person see S 200 and Notes thereon.

3 Particulars of the offence — The section requires that the particulars of the offence charged must be stated to the accused. A general reference to the terms of the marginal note of a section is not sufficient.¹ It is not necessary that the Magistrate should make a record of what he has stated to the accused in explaining the offence.² But there must be some indication in the record to show that the provisions of this section were complied with.³ However the omission to make a note to the effect that the particulars of the offence were explained to the accused is only an irregularity.⁴ In the undermentioned case⁵ the accused was sent up by the police on certain allegations. It was held that on such allegations being found not to amount to any offence, it was not open to the Magistrate to proceed against the accused on some other footing which would inculpate him. Where the accused is prosecuted for an offence of which he is not proved to be guilty he cannot be convicted for another offence without being called upon to show cause why he should not be convicted of such other offence.⁶

4 No formal charge necessary — Under this section it is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to frame a formal charge in a summons case. It has however, been held in the undermentioned case¹ that when a prosecution is for an offence under an Act of very recent date with the provisions of which the litigants as well as the lawyers are not quite familiar it would be proper for a Magistrate to frame a formal charge.

As to cases where the Magistrate frames a charge in a summons case and the accused is misled into believing that he will be given an opportunity to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses see Notes on Section 256.

5 Plea of accused — In summons cases the Magistrate must record the accused's plea at the commencement of the trial.¹ See Section 213.

6 Joinder of charges — Though this section provides that in summons cases it is not necessary to frame a formal charge the provisions of the Code relating to the joinder of charges and the joint trial of accused persons apply to the trial of summons cases also¹

7 Joint trial of a summons case and a warrant case — See Notes on Section 241

8 Effect of non compliance with the section. — Does the omission to state the particulars of the offence to the accused as required by this section amount to an illegality or to a mere irregularity curable under S 537? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand it has been held by the Calcutta High Court¹ that such an omission is an illegality and not a mere irregularity covered by S 537. On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras² and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur³ and Peshawar⁴ that such an omission is only an irregularity which under S 537 does not vitiate the trial unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. In the undermentioned Patna case⁵ the view of the Calcutta High Court was adopted but in the undermentioned case⁶ the opposite view was followed.

243. If the accused admits that he has committed the offence of Conviction on admission of truth of accusation which he is accused, his admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him, and, if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly.

A Magistrate may call for evidence even after he has accepted the plea of guilty made by the accused, with the object of acquainting himself with the facts of the case in order to pass an adequate sentence.⁷ A plea of "guilty" can be allowed to be withdrawn if the accused was, at the time of making it, enfeebled by illness and undefended.⁸

3 Admission by pleader — See Section 205 Note 7

4 Record of admission — This section requires that an admission of an accused should be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him.¹ Further an admission should be recorded immediately it is made and not afterwards from rough notes or memory.²

5 One admission for several accused — The law requires that each accused should be questioned separately and that the answers given should be taken as nearly as possible in the words used by each accused. Therefore, where a Magistrate records one admission for a number of accused persons the admission is bad.¹

6 Warrant case tried as a summons-case — Conviction on plea of accused — See Section 202 and Notes thereon

7 Whether order for security for keeping the peace may be based on consent of person sought to be bound — See Section 117 Note 3

8 "If he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted" — These words are to be read along with the earlier part of the section and not as a distinct and separate part. Where an accused does not admit his guilt, he cannot be convicted merely because he does not show sufficient cause against his conviction.¹

244.* (1) If the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section or if the accused does not make such admission, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any), and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence

Procedure when no such admission made

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on the application of the complainant or accused, issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or other thing

1. Legislative changes

Changes made by Act 18 [XVIII] of 1923 —

- (1) The words "If the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section or which have been added at the commencement of sub s (1) are in keeping with the amendment of s 243 whereby the Magistrate is no longer obliged to convict on a plea of guilty but may notwithstanding such plea record evidence before convicting the accused
- (2) The proviso to sub s (1) is new and provides for a case where a complaint is made by a Court
- (3) In sub s (2) for the words "process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of the words "a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce" have been substituted¹

2 "Shall proceed to hear the complainant" — When an accused person denies the truth of the complaint made against him the Magistrate ought to hear the complainant and his witnesses in support of the prosecution and also the accused and his witnesses¹ He is bound to hear the complainant and take all evidence that he produces in support of the prosecution before he can acquit the accused² An order of acquittal passed without this being done is illegal,³ and the High Court may set it aside in revision.⁴

The accused cannot be convicted except upon the evidence that he did commit the offence, the latter part of S 243 must not be read as distinct and separable from the first part.⁵ A conviction is illegal which is arrived at without the recording of the prosecution evidence.⁶ Similarly, where the accused was convicted upon a statement of the complainant not made on oath before a Magistrate, the conviction was held to be illegal.⁷

This section does not make the examination of the complainant himself absolutely necessary, so as to vitiate a conviction if such examination does not take place.⁸ But when a complainant's evidence is taken it should be in the presence of the accused. The common practice of not examining the complainant at the trial but only under s 200 of the Code is contrary to law.⁹

A Magistrate while enquiring into the complaint cannot, in the same case, convict the complainant himself because the evidence discloses that he too was a party to an affray. If the complainant is to be convicted it can only be in separate proceedings taken against him.¹⁰

Criminal Courts have no authority to order the accused to pay the complainant costs of an adjournment on the failure of the accused to appear on the day fixed for hearing of the complaint¹¹

3 Evidence in support of the prosecution—The language of the section is compulsory and the Magistrate is bound to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution¹ Even when the complainant declines to be examined, it is the duty of the Magistrate to proceed to take the evidence of his other witnesses before dismissing the complaint, although in any event a strong preliminary presumption against the truth of the complainant's case would arise from his contumacious refusal to be examined² In summons cases, the parties have an undoubted right to examine their witnesses and their right could only be curtailed by the Court upon the ground that the examination of these witnesses will delay and possibly defeat the ends of justice³ But where a complainant after examining some of the witnesses named by him did not apply to the Magistrate to issue summons to other witnesses it was held that the Magistrate was not wrong in deciding the case on evidence before him⁴ A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to refuse to examine a witness who is deaf but who is able to speak and write Such refusal is materially prejudicial and vitiates the trial⁵

A Magistrate should always be chary of taking upon himself the duty of deciding on behalf of the parties which witnesses should be examined⁶ Generally it is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses and as a rule the Court should leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as provided for in S 198 of the Evidence Act Section 430 sub s (3) also tends in the same direction⁷

It is no doubt ordinarily the duty of the prosecution if they rely on documents to tender them in evidence together with such formal proof as may be necessary But where documents actually on the file of the proceedings are not formally exhibited and put on record as evidence the Magistrate should in the exercise of a wise discretion before the close of the prosecution case draw the attention of the prosecution to the fact that the documents have not been exhibited or ascertain whether they are to be regarded as having been produced as evidence for the prosecution under S 244⁸

But a Magistrate cannot after the trial is closed and while writing judgment admit in evidence a document without giving the accused an opportunity of raising objection to its relevancy and admissibility⁹

The closing of the case for the prosecution is no mere form but with certain exceptions closes the door to any further evidence against the accused The prosecution cannot reopen the case and make additions to it except such voluntary addition as the accused can himself make¹⁰ A statement by a party that he has closed his case should bear the signature of the party In the absence of such signature it is not recorded in accordance with law and there is no presumption of its correctness¹¹

Statements made by a defence witness against accused persons other than the one who called him as a witness cannot be considered as if it were evidence led on behalf of the complainant¹²

Where a Magistrate adopts the procedure prescribed by this section on the footing that there was no admission of guilt on the part of the accused person he is not competent to take a further plea of guilty from the accused and relieve himself of the duty of examining other prosecution witnesses¹³

In connected cases it is not proper to take the depositions in one case and have them copied and used in the other¹⁴

4 Duty of prosecution — The duty of the prosecution is to prove all the relevant facts essential to establish the guilt of the accused¹ Irrelevant evidence should be excluded and the prosecution must be confined to simple and true evidence and no attempt should be made to hide essential facts or to embroider the case²

The prosecution cannot be permitted at the last moment to change its ground.³
See also S 296, Note 13

5 Cross examination — The section does not contain any express provision for cross-examination but a cross examination must certainly be allowed at some stage and hence the right is exercisable under this section¹ In the procedure laid down for the trial of summons-cases the accused has no right to postpone the cross examination of any prosecution witnesses as in the trial of warrant cases But if the cross examination is postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate he is bound to give the accused a further opportunity to cross examine the witnesses Without such examination the evidence will not be legally admissible and the irregularity will vitiate the trial²

6 Extra-judicial information — It is extremely improper for a Magistrate in disposing of a case to rely in any way on statements made to him out of Court¹

7 Evidence of the accused — The evidence of the accused should be taken after that of the complainant¹ But where no prejudice was caused it was held that the fact of a Deputy Magistrate having recorded some evidence of the defence before the close of the case for the prosecution would be no ground for reversing his decision²

The section makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to hear the accused and record the evidence which he adduces in his defence after the prosecution evidence is recorded³ When the section says that the Magistrate shall hear the accused, it certainly means that he should ask the accused what he has to say in his own defence against the charge which has been brought against him and in explanation of the evidence which has been led to support the charge⁴ But the examination need not be recorded with the same formality as in warrant cases or preliminary enquiries⁵ As to the applicability of S 312 to summons cases see Note 3 on S 312

No Criminal Court can shut its eyes to the statement of an accused person when that statement refers to certain documents to which the accused is a party The Court may not be satisfied with the statement or may require further proof but it cannot brush aside the documents to which the accused are parties when the accused themselves file those document in Court along with their statements. As the accused cannot be examined on oath, they can only file a statement or refer to some documents to which they have been parties.⁶

Where, after closing hours the Magistrate insisted on going on with the case and the accused's counsel wanted an adjournment to examine the witnesses who were in attendance and the adjournment was refused, one ground being that no defence list had been filed, it was held that the ground for refusal was wrong and the convictions were set aside.⁷

It is the duty of Magistrates when dealing with ignorant individuals accused of technical offences to go very thoroughly into the evidence, and where they are not defended by advocates, to give them some assistance in putting up obvious defensive pleas.⁸

As to the effect of refusal by a Magistrate to examine a witness, on the conviction of the accused see S 537, Note 27.

8. "May issue summons" — Under the Code of 1861, s 263, it was in the discretion of the Magistrate to summon the witnesses "if he considered the evidence essential to the just decision of the case," and incumbent on him to summon them only if it appeared to him that they were likely to give material evidence and that they would not voluntarily appear for the purpose of being examined.¹

Under the present section also, the Magistrate is under no obligation to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness either on the application of the complainant or the accused. He has a discretion in the matter.² However, he must consider the application. He cannot ignore it completely,³ nor can he exercise the discretion to the detriment of the applicant in an arbitrary manner.⁴ The arbitrary exercise of discretion does not necessarily amount to acting without jurisdiction so as to justify the High Court's interference in all cases, but where the refusal to issue process amounts to a denial of justice, the High Court would interfere.⁵ Thus, when the accused was a police constable and it was not improbable that the witnesses for the prosecution would not voluntarily appear, it was held that it was just such a case in which the Magistrate should have exercised his discretion and issued summons.⁶ Where, on the other hand, no prejudice is caused, the High Court will not interfere with the order of the Magistrate.⁷

Though there is no provision for securing the attendance of witnesses residing in a foreign territory, the Magistrate is bound to make all reasonable efforts to procure their

attendance⁸

Where an accused who was called upon to let in evidence applied for, and obtained the summoning of his witnesses on his behalf, it was held that he had exhausted the power of summoning witnesses for the defence and all that he could do was to move the Magistrate to summon any other witnesses whom he might deem necessary under S 540⁹

An application for summoning witnesses cannot be granted by a Magistrate not seized of the case¹⁰

An application for summoning witnesses must be made without unnecessary delay. An accused is not entitled to wait till the close of the prosecution case and then apply for summons to witnesses. A Magistrate will be justified in refusing an application for summons made after undue delay¹¹

9. Re-issue of summons — It was held by the Calcutta High Court in cases decided prior to the amendment of sub s (2) that there was no discretionary power given by S 244 to a Magistrate to refuse to compel the attendance of witnesses upon whom processes had already been issued¹. This view has also been adopted by the Patna High Court subsequent to the amendment². But the Madras view is that the change in the new Code by the substitution of the words "may issue summons to any witness" for the words "may issue process to compel the attendance of any witness," renders it no longer obligatory on a Magistrate to compel the attendance of a witness who has received the summons³.

But every endeavour should be made to secure attendance of witnesses who have been summoned⁴, and a Court should see that its summons and warrants are duly executed⁵.

When a Magistrate is unable to record the evidence of witnesses in attendance on the date fixed and the case is adjourned, the witnesses should be told to appear on the adjourned date, a party should not be required to repeatedly summon his witnesses on payment of fresh process fees merely because the Magistrate is unable to record their evidence on the date originally fixed⁶.

10. Adjournment for procuring attendance of witnesses. — The terms of the section apparently suppose that the defence witnesses attend voluntarily and accompany the accused¹. The law intends that as a general rule the prisoner should have his witnesses present on the day of trial². If a summons is necessary to procure the attendance of any witness, it should be applied for before the date fixed for hearing. When no such application is made a Magistrate does not exercise his discretion wrongly in refusing an adjournment asked for at the trial³. On the other hand, however, it is not an irregularity to adjourn a trial for the purpose of enabling accused to procure the attendance of his witnesses.⁴

The section no doubt imposes an obligation on parties of procuring their evidence in summons cases but the Court should before convicting an accused in such a case, take the precaution of ascertaining from the accused whether he has any witnesses and if he has but they are not present should consider whether he should not be allowed a further opportunity of bringing or summoning his witnesses through Court, where this was not done a conviction was set aside.⁵ But a Court is not bound to do this and although the Magistrate may not have exercised a wise discretion in not sending for the defence witnesses the High Court held in a case that it was unable to say that there was any illegality requiring it to quash the conviction.⁶

8. Committal to sessions —As to the legality of committing to sessions offences triable as summons cases see Note 4 on Section 31²

246. A Magistrate may, under section 243 or section 245, convict ^{himself not limited by} the accused of any offence triable under this Chapter ^{complaint or summons} which from the facts admitted or proved he appears to have committed, whatever may be the nature of the complaint or summons.

1 Scope of the section — This section is analogous to s 22³ and enables the Magistrate to convict the accused of any offence which from the facts proved or admitted, he appears to have committed though it is different in its nature from the offence originally charged. But it is necessary that both the original offence and the offence of which the accused is sought to be convicted are triable *as summons cases*¹. The fact that the offence originally charged was one under a local or special law and that the offence of which the accused is sought to be convicted is under the Penal Code does not affect the applicability of the section provided that both are triable as summons cases.

When convicting an accused person under this section for a different offence from that originally charged it is not necessary to reopen the trial and to follow again the procedure prescribed by s 243 and 244⁴. But this does not mean that a Magistrate can convict an accused person of an offence in respect of which he has had no opportunity of defending himself⁵. Further the section refers to the nature of the offence and not to the date on which the offence was committed. Hence the section does not empower a Magistrate in a summons case to convict an accused person of an offence alleged to have been committed on a date different from that of the offence originally charged⁶.

247. If the summons has been issued on complaint, and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned, the complainant does not appear, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day

Provided that, where the complainant is a public servant and his personal attendance is not required, the Magistrate may dispense with his attendance, and proceed with the case.

1 Legislative changes — In the Code of 1861 (Ss 259 and 269) the procedure was to dismiss the complaint¹ on the failure of the complainant to appear on the day of hearing. In the Code of 1872 it was provided that on default of appearance of the complainant on the date of hearing the complaint might be dismissed and that the effect of such a dismissal was the same as an acquittal². In the later Codes it was provided that in such circumstances the accused shall be acquitted.

The proviso to the section was added for the first time in the 1893 Code.

2 Scope, object and applicability of the section — This section provides that if on the day of hearing the complainant does not appear the accused shall be acquitted unless the Magistrate thinks fit to adjourn the case. The object of the section is to prevent the complainant from being dilatory in the prosecution of the case¹. The section applies only to summons cases. In warrant cases the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to acquit an accused on the ground of the absence of the complainant² As to the procedure to be followed in such cases if the complainant absents himself on the date of hearing see S 259 But where the Magistrate treats a case throughout as a summons case and follows the procedure prescribed for such cases, he is at liberty to acquit the accused under this section although the complaint mentioned offences triable as warrant cases³ As the opening words of the section show, the section does not apply unless the proceedings have been instituted on a complaint⁴

Inquiries under S 1 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act 1859 are not criminal proceedings and the section does not apply to them⁵

3 Applicability of section to cases consisting both of offences triable as summons cases and offences triable as warrant-cases—As seen in Note 2 on S 241, where a case consists of two charges one of which is a summons case and the other a warrant case the procedure prescribed for the trial of the graver offence should be followed and the case ought to be tried as a warrant case Hence, in such a case if the complainant absents himself on the date of hearing the Magistrate cannot acquit the accused under this section but can only discharge him under section 259¹

Where, however, a case is begun as a warrant case but a charge is framed only for an offence triable as a summons case, it has been held by the Madras High Court that the accused is entitled to acquittal under this section on the complainant's absence on the day of hearing This view proceeds on the ground that this section confers a substantive right on the accused of which he cannot be deprived merely by reason of the adoption of a particular procedure by the Magistrate² See also Note 4 on S 241

4. "Upon the day . . . adjourned"—The section refers to the absence of the complainant on the date fixed for the appearance of the accused or to which the hearing has been adjourned If the Magistrate under a mistake takes up the case on a day to which it was not posted and dismisses the complaint this section does not apply¹ The section applies though the case has been posted only for arguments, because in such a case the

while the High Courts of Bombay⁶ and Patna⁷ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur⁸ have doubted whether the section applies. If it be held that the section applies to such cases it is open to the Magistrate either to acquit the accused⁹ or to adjourn the case to enable another person to continue the prosecution¹⁰. If it be held that the section does not apply it is conceived that the Magistrate has no power to acquit the accused but must go on with the case¹¹.

7 "The Magistrate shall some other day"—If the complainant does not appear on the day of hearing the accused is entitled to be acquitted¹ unless the Magistrate for some reason thinks it proper to adjourn the case². The Magistrate has no power to dispense with the appearance of the complainant³ or compel him to appear and go on with the case⁴. Where the Magistrate neither acquits the accused nor adjourns the case but goes on with the trial of the case the procedure is entirely illegal⁵. But unless an order of acquittal is actually passed by the Magistrate, the mere absence of the complainant on the day of hearing does not ipso facto result in the acquittal of the accused⁶. The exercise of discretion in favour of the complainant once by adjourning the hearing does not deprive the Magistrate of the power of acquitting the accused on the non appearance of the complainant at a subsequent hearing⁷.

The following cases are illustrative of the circumstances under which a Magistrate would be exercising his discretion under the section properly by adjourning the case and

1. Legislative changes. — The clause at the end of the section "and shall thereupon acquit the accused" was substituted in the Code of 1892 for the words 'a complaint withdrawn under this section shall not again be entertained' which occurred in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872

2. Scope of the section. — This section provides that under the circumstances specified therein a complaint may be withdrawn with the permission of the Court and that upon such withdrawal the accused must be acquitted. The section, however, applies only to summons cases. (See Note 6) An analogous provision is made in S 491 for the withdrawal of prosecution by the Public Prosecutor with the permission of the Court. That section applies to all offences and is not confined like the present one to summons cases. Section 315 provides for the compounding of offences. As to differences between withdrawal of complaint under this section and compounding of an offence under S 315, see Note 3

Section 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, which authorises the Corporation of Calcutta to withdraw legal proceedings, must be read subject to the provisions of this section and unless the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for permitting a complaint to be withdrawn, the Corporation cannot withdraw a criminal complaint¹

As to abandonment of criminal proceedings, see the undermentioned cases²

See also Notes on Sections 491 and 333

3. Withdrawal of complaint and compounding of offences—Difference between.

1. "Compounding" implies the consent of the accused, whereas such consent is not necessary for the withdrawal of a complaint under this section¹

2. The right to withdraw a complaint under this section applies only to offences triable as summons cases (see Note 6). But the right to compound an offence under S 315 applies both to summons as well as to warrant cases provided they relate to the offence specified in that section

3. Under this section a complaint can be withdrawn in respect of all offences which are triable as summons cases. But under S 315 the right to compound applies only to certain offences specified in that section

4. In the case of withdrawal of complaint under the section, the permission of the Court is necessary in all cases. But under S 315 there are several offences which are compoundable without the permission of the Court and such permission is necessary only with reference to certain offences

5 The withdrawal of a complaint under this section does not by itself result in the acquittal of the accused, unless the Court passes an order acquitting the accused. But the compounding of an offence under S 345 by itself results in the acquittal of the accused

See also Section 315, Note 3

4. "Complaint" — Under this section, a complaint can be withdrawn with the permission of the Court, by a complainant. Thus, where the sanction of a certain public servant is necessary for the criminal proceedings in question and a complaint is filed with the sanction of such public servant, the complaint can be withdrawn by the person filing it and the sanction of the public servant is not necessary for such withdrawal¹

But, the power to withdraw is confined to the complainant. Thus, where a complaint with reference to an offence under the Municipal law is filed by the Municipal Secretary, the complaint cannot be withdrawn by the Municipal Council². Moreover, the term "complainant" is used in the restricted sense of a person who files a "complaint" as defined by S 4 (1) (b). Hence, the term does not apply to a person who sets the police in motion by making a complaint to them. Therefore, where a person makes a complaint to the police and the police make a report to the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence on such report, he cannot act under this section and acquit the accused on the application for "withdrawal" by the person who made the complaint to the police³.

5. "At any time before a final order is passed" — A complaint can be withdrawn under this section at any time¹ before a final order is passed in the case. But this does not mean that a complaint can be withdrawn and the accused can be acquitted, so as to bar a re-trial of the accused under S. 403, even before any process is issued against the accused².

6. "In any case under this Chapter." — This section applies only to offences triable as summons cases and does not apply to offences triable as warrant cases. In warrant cases there is no provision in the Code which provides for the termination of the proceedings on the complainant offering to withdraw his complaint¹. An offence under

S 24 of the Cattle trespass Act being triable as a summons case, a complaint of such an offence can be withdrawn under this section²

7. "Satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint"—The withdrawal of a complaint under this section is permissible only if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are "sufficient grounds" for permitting such withdrawal¹. But where a complaint of offences under ss 183 and 185 of the Penal Code is made by a Court and such Court subsequently finds that it made a mistake in filing the complaint and wishes to withdraw it, the Magistrate will scarcely be justified in refusing to allow a withdrawal³.

The power to allow a complaint to be withdrawn under this section rests entirely with the Magistrate. The police have no power to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint⁴.

Under this section it is competent to a Magistrate in a proper case to treat an application to the effect that the offence has been compounded as an application for withdrawal of complaint⁴.

8 "Shall thereupon acquit the accused."—Upon the withdrawal of a complaint, the Magistrate has no power to dismiss the case or discharge the accused but must acquit the accused¹.

1 "In any case instituted otherwise than upon a complaint" — This section applies only to cases instituted otherwise than upon a complaint¹ Further, a Magistrate can proceed under this section only in summons cases² If he proceeds under this section in a warrant case his order will be void and the case will be deemed to continue on the file of the Court³

2 Revival — On general principles the Magistrate who passed an order of stay under this section may, for sufficient reasons remove the stay and proceed further¹ But an order stopping further proceedings under this section does not operate as an order of discharge and there is no power under S 436 to order further inquiry into a case in which such an order has been passed² At the same time the order is expressly excluded by the explanation to S 403 from being an acquittal and hence it does not act as a bar to fresh proceedings against the accused with reference to the same matter³

(1) If in any case instituted upon complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid

(2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation to such amount not exceeding one hundred rupees or, if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not

250 (1) If in any case instituted by complaint as defined in this Code or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits the accused and is satisfied that the accusation against him was frivolous or vexatious the Magistrate may, in his discretion by his order of discharge or acquittal, direct the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made to pay to the accused, or to each of the accused where there are more than one such compensation not exceeding fifty rupees, as the Magistrate thinks fit

Provided that before making any such direction the Magistrate shall —

(a) record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction and

(b) if the Magistrate directs any compensation to be paid state in writing in his order of discharge or acquittal his reasons for awarding the compensation

(2) Compensation of which a Magistrate has ordered payment under sub-section (1) shall be recoverable as if it were a fine

Provided that if it cannot be recovered the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term not exceeding thirty days as the Magistrate directs

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-s (1) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation to an accused person may appeal from the order, in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate

(4) Where an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is a subject to appeal under sub-s (3) the compensation shall not be paid to him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed or, if an appeal is presented before the appeal has been decided

(5) At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter the Court shall take into account any compensation paid or recovered under this section

Code of 1882 S 250

250 If in any case instituted upon complaint a Magistrate acquits the accused under S 243 or S 247, and is of opinion that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious he may, in his discretion by his order of acquittal direct the complainant to pay to the accused, or to each of the accused where there are more than one such compensation not exceeding fifty rupees, as the Magistrate thinks fit

The sum so awarded shall be recoverable as if it were a fine provided that if it cannot be recovered the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs. At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter the Court shall take into account any sum paid or recovered as compensation under this section exceeding fifty rupees, as he may determine, be paid by such complainant or informant to the accused or to each or any of them.

(2A) The Magistrate may, by the order directing payment of the compensation under sub section (2), further order that, in default of payment, the person ordered to pay such compensation shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub-section (2A), the provisions of sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall, by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees may appeal from the order, in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate

(4) When an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is subject to appeal under sub-section (3), the compensation shall not be paid to him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed, or, if an appeal is presented, before the appeal has been decided and, where such order is made in a case which is not so subject to appeal, the compensation shall not be paid before the expiration of one month from the date of the order.

Changes made in 1869 —

- (1) Under s 270 of the Code of 1861, the compensation awarded could not exceed rupees fifty, whether there were one accused person or more¹ Act 8 [VIII] of 1870 amended the section and made rupees fifty awardable as compensation for each of the accused where there were more than one²
- (2) The words "false and frivolous" were changed into "false or frivolous"³

Changes made in 1872 —

The second part of s 270 of the 1861 Code relating to the mode of recovery of compensation was omitted in s 203 of the Code of 1872, provision having been made therefor in s 307 of the latter Code

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) For the words "dismiss the complaint as frivolous or vexatious" and "by his order of dismissal," the words "acquits the accused under s 215 or s 217" and "is of opinion that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious" and "by his order of acquittal" were substituted.

- (2) The provisions as to recovery of the sum awarded, as if it were a fine and imprisonment if the same is not realised were re introduced as paragraph 2
- (3) Paragraph 3 was added

Changes made in 1891 —

Act 4 [IV] of 1891 repealed s 250 of the Code of 1882 and in its place substituted s 500 at the end of first Code. The chief changes made were in sub s (1) —

- (1) After the word 'complaint' the words "or upon information given to a police officer or to a Magistrate, a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate" were added.
- (2) After the word 'Magistrate' the words 'by whom the case is heard' were added
- (3) For the words 'acquits,' etc, the words "discharges or acquits" were substituted
- (4) The provisions as to the recording and considering the objections of the complainant and the recording of reasons for the orders were added.
- (5) Paragraphs 3 and 4 regarding appeals were added

Changes made in 1898 —

There was no change in the Code of 1898

Changes made by Act 18 [XVIII] of 1923 —

- (1) In sub sections (1) and (2)
- (a) For the words 'frivolous or vexatious,' the words false and either frivolous or vexatious were substituted
- (b) The words beginning with "if the person upon whose complaint" to the end of sub section (1) were new
- (c) The words fifty rupees were replaced by the words "one hundred rupees or if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class not exceeding fifty rupees"
- (2) The proviso to old sub s (2) was incorporated in the newly added sub s (2A) and the old sub section (2) was omitted
- (3) Sub section (2B) is new
- (4) Sub section (2C) is new. The proviso is the same as sub s (5) (now repealed) of the Code of 1898
- (5) In sub s (3) for the word and figure 'sub s (1)' the word and figure "sub s (2)" were substituted and after the words "pay compensation" the words "or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees" were added
- (6) In sub section (4) the last sentence is new

2 Object and applicability of the section — The object of the section is twofold, firstly, to award by a summary order some compensation to the person against whom a frivolous or vexatious accusation is brought, leaving it to him to obtain further redress against the complainant, if he seeks for it by a regular civil suit or criminal prosecution,¹ and secondly, to deter persons from making vexatious and frivolous complaints.² The powers, however, should never be used as a punitive measure.³

Under the Code as it stood before it was amended in 1891, it was held that this section applied only to summons-cases and not to warrant cases.⁴ For the changes intro in 1881 and 1882. The present section is applicable to any case triable by a Magistrate. It is applicable also to case triable summarily whether tried summarily or not.

3. 'Upon complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate' — In the year 1881 the corresponding section of the old Code only was a case was instituted upon a complaint and not to cases instituted on 'information'. After the amendment of that section in 1891 and also under the present Code on a case instituted on 'information given to a police officer or to a Magistrate' is valid in the present law.

As has been seen already in S 4 (1) (h), a police-report is not a complaint and compensation cannot be awarded in a case instituted on such report.³ The words "information given to a police officer" mean information given and entered in the register of cognizable cases under section 154 of the Code,⁴ and the words "information given to a Magistrate" refer to such information as falls within S 190 (1), clause (c) of the Code.⁵ A statement by a person to a police officer in the course of a police enquiry is not an "information" given to him and a case instituted on the basis of such statement is not within the section.⁶ But where a person points out two persons to the police as those who assaulted him and the police treats this as first information, the case is one that falls under this section.⁷

The report of a Civil Court Amin to the Civil Court that he has been obstructed in the execution of the process entrusted to him is neither a complaint nor information to a police officer or to a Magistrate, and where the Civil Court directs a prosecution on the basis of such report, the Amin cannot be ordered to pay compensation under this section.⁸ Similarly, where A tells B and B tells C and C tells the police, A cannot be said to give any information to the police and no order can be made against him under this section.⁹ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held in the undermentioned case¹⁰ that where

A tells B about C with a view to securing the punishment of C and B informs the Magistrate A can be ordered to pay compensation. It is submitted that this view is not correct. Where however the information is given by A to a person whose duty it is to report the same to the police or the Magistrate (as in cases coming under s. 45 of the Code), the latter only acts as a channel for conveying the information given by A who can, therefore, be ordered to pay compensation.¹¹

An application under s. 45C of this Code is not a complaint. It is merely an application that a complaint be made. This section has, therefore, no application to such a case.¹²

4 "Accused of an offence." — The section by its terms applies only where in pursuance of a complaint or information a person is accused before a Magistrate of an offence. It does not therefore, apply to the following cases where there is no accusation of any offence as defined in s. 4 (1) (c) of the Code.

- (1) Security proceedings under s. 107¹ and s. 110²
- (2) Application for maintenance under s. 488³

The section applies to a complaint under s 20 of the Cattle trespass Act, as it has specifically been introduced in the Code of 1898 as an offence under the Code. Therefore, the undermentioned rulings,⁷ holding that compensation could not be awarded in such cases, are no longer law.

It was held in a decision under the Code of 1861 that the provisions of this section were inapplicable to a complaint under a special law⁸ and in another that it would be applicable⁹. Under the present section it is applicable to a case of any offence, as for example, under the Railways Act, 18 [XVIII] of 1851¹⁰.

5. "Triable by a Magistrate."—The offence must be one which is triable by a Magistrate,¹ that is, one which is shown as triable by a Magistrate in column 8 of Sch II.² Thus, the section does not apply to cases where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session but is enquired into by the Magistrate under chapter XVIII of the Code³ or is even tried by him under the special powers under s 80 of the Code.⁴

When a complaint is made of offences some of which are triable by the Magistrate and some by the Sessions Court and the accused is discharged in respect of all the offences, an order for compensation can be passed under this section only in respect of the offences triable by the Magistrate and not in respect of the other offences also.⁶

In filing a complaint the complainant must, for the purposes of this section, be satisfied to file an accusation which includes not merely the offence charged therein but also any offence which the fact in the complaint disclose in the light of any enquiry or trial. The mere fact that the complaint charges the accused with an offence which is not triable by a Magistrate does not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass an order under this section if after enquiry the Magistrate finds that the accusation is really one in respect of an offence triable by him.⁷ But it is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to find whether a case is triable by a Court of Session or by himself and if he tries an accused for an offence prima facie triable by him an order under this section is not illegal even if really the facts prove the offence to be one triable by a Court of Session.⁸ The question, therefore, whether an offence is triable by a Magistrate is not to be decided solely by the complaint. The proper criterion is the form of the proceedings, i.e., whether they were conducted under Chapter VIII or Chapter VI.⁹

Where a particular Magistrate, however, has no power to try a case even though it is triable by a Magistrate, he cannot award compensation as he has not the power to try the case itself.¹⁰

6 Magistrate by whom the case is heard. — It is only the Magistrate by whom the case is heard that can pass an order under this section.¹ It is not the intention of the Legislature that one Magistrate should deal with the case and call upon the complainant to show cause and that another Magistrate should pass an order for compensation.² Thus,

The section applies to a complaint under s 20 of the Cattle trespass Act, as it has specifically been introduced in the Code of 1893 as an offence under the Code. Therefore, the undermentioned rulings,⁷ holding that compensation could not be awarded in such cases, are no longer law.

It was held in a decision under the Code of 1861 that the provisions of this section were inapplicable to a complaint under a special law⁸ and in another that it would be applicable.⁹ Under the present section it is applicable to a case of any offence, as for example, under the Railways Act, 18 [XVIII] of 1854¹⁰

5. "Triable by a Magistrate."—The offence must be one which is triable by a Magistrate,¹ that is, one which is shown as triable by a Magistrate in column 8 of Sch. II.² Thus, the section does not apply to cases where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session but is enquired into by the Magistrate under chapter XVIII of the Code³ or is even tried by him under the special powers under s 30 of the Code.⁴

The mere fact that the complaint charges the accused with an offence which is not triable by a Magistrate does not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass an order under this section if after enquiry the Magistrate finds that the accusation is really one in respect of an offence triable by him.⁷ But it is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to find whether a case is triable by a Court of Session or by himself and if he tries an accused for an offence prima facie triable by him an order under this section is not illegal even if really the facts prove the offence to be one triable by a Court of Session.⁸ The question therefore whether an offence is triable by a Magistrate is not to be decided solely by the complaint. an Appellate Court³ cannot when reversing a conviction act under this section. Even a High Court cannot in revision pass an order for compensation although it is of opinion that such an order should be made⁴. See also Note 39 on S 423.

The words "the Magistrate by whom the case is heard" do not however, mean that the evidence must have been heard by him but mean "the Magistrate by whom the case is decided". So where part of the evidence is heard by one Magistrate and the rest of the evidence is heard and the case is decided by another the latter is competent to order compensation under this section⁵. A Magistrate by whom a case is heard need not be the one before whom it was instituted⁶.

7 "Discharges or acquits"—Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 compensation could be awarded only where the complaint was dismissed as being frivolous or vexatious. There was a divergence of opinions as to whether it could be awarded in cases of acquittal¹.

The Code of 1882 provided for the award of compensation only in cases where the accused was acquitted under S 215 or S 247². An acquittal by reason of withdrawal of the complaint was not within the section³.

After the amendment in 1891 (see Note 1) the Magistrate can act under this section when he either discharges or acquits an accused person⁴. The acquittal may be either one under S 245 or S 247 or may be one passed on the withdrawal of the complaint. But the acquittal must be one made by the Magistrate himself. The composition of an offence under S 245 has by itself the effect of an acquittal but there is no order by the Magistrate himself recording an acquittal. The section is not applicable to such cases and no compensation can be awarded.⁵

Where the accused is neither discharged nor acquitted this section does not apply and no compensation can be awarded to him.⁶ Thus where a complaint is dismissed under S 203 there is neither a discharge nor an acquittal of the accused as no process is at all issued to the accused consequently no compensation can be awarded under this section.⁷

This section speaks of the case as a whole and contemplates a trial or inquiry ending in an unqualified acquittal or discharge of the accused and the policy of the Legislature is to limit the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under this section to simple cases in which the complainant is found to be wholly in the wrong and the accused is discharged or acquitted altogether. So where an accused is charged with two offences and convicted under one and acquitted under another, this section will not apply.⁸

8 False and either frivolous or vexatious — Before the amendment of 1973 an order under this section could be passed if the case was either frivolous or vexatious.¹ It was not necessary that the charge should be false as well. But it was held in some cases that neither of the two words excluded the element of falsehood in the charge and that a charge which is false must also be vexatious and is not outside the scope of the section.²

Under the present Code the case must be false and either frivolous or vexatious⁵ and there must be a definite finding to that effect before an order for compensation can be pressed⁴. The fact that a Magistrate has framed a charge, does not of itself prevent him from holding, after inquiry, that the charge is false and frivolous or vexatious⁵.

As qualifying an accusation the term "frivolous" indicates that the accusation is of a trivial nature⁶ or is "trifling," "silly" or "without due foundation"⁷. The term vexatious implies that the accusation is one that ought not to have been made and is intended to 'harass'⁸ or 'annoy'⁹ the accused. For instance, where a criminal prosecution is launched on mere suspicion¹⁰ or with a view to put pressure on an opponent in a civil suit,¹¹ the Magistrate is justified in acting under this section. Similarly, a false accusation of rape is vexatious to the person accused.¹²

But where the complainant's case is not an improbable one¹³ and he is merely unable to prove his case,¹⁴ or there is nothing to show that it is wilfully false or that there is any perversion or exaggeration of evidence,¹⁵ it is not proper to hold the complaint false and vexatious. Similarly, the fact that the complainant and the accused are on bad terms is not a sufficient ground for holding that the complaint is a false one.¹⁶

9. "By his order"—Before the amendment of 1923, the order to pay compensation was part of the order of discharge or acquittal, that is to say, the order of discharge or acquittal and the order directing compensation had to be made simultaneously. An order for compensation made, after such discharge or acquittal, in a separate proceeding was held to be illegal.¹ This is no longer law as after the amendment it is not necessary that the order for compensation should be embodied in the order of discharge. The two orders are made in separate proceedings. It is only the order calling upon the complainant to show cause which is to be contained in the order of discharge or acquittal.³ The actual order for compensation is necessarily a subsequent order.³ But, where the order of compensation is made along with the order of discharge or acquittal, the provision of law is complied with if the order calling upon the complainant to show cause is also made simultaneously with the order of discharge.⁴ The order calling upon the complainant to show cause cannot either precede⁵ or be made after⁶ the order of discharge or acquittal. Although, the order to show cause is not made part of the judgment of discharge or acquittal, if it is passed and signed immediately after the judgment, so that the order can be said to be a continuation of the original proceeding, or part of it, it is not illegal.⁷

Where there are two accused, and one of them is discharged on one day and the other acquitted on a later day, the Magistrate cannot call upon the complainant, in so far as the payment of compensation to the discharged accused is concerned, to show cause on the day of the acquittal of the other accused, as the case against that person is at an end on the date of his discharge and no order to show cause can be made subsequently.⁸ But where the same accused is charged with two offences, and he is discharged on one charge first, and acquitted of other charges at a later date, it is not illegal to pass an order to show cause on the later date⁹

10 "Call upon him to show cause" — When a Magistrate discharging or acquitting an accused intends to take action under this section, he has to call upon the complainant forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused or if he is not present direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause¹. An order for compensation made without giving the complainant an opportunity to show cause is illegal and must be set aside². If the complainant is present, he is bound to show cause immediately. He cannot insist upon the grant of an adjournment for the purpose³.

It is only after the examination of all the evidence, which the complainant wants to adduce, that a Magistrate can come to the conclusion that the case is false and frivolous or vexatious and can award compensation to the accused. Though he can discharge the accused at any stage he is not entitled to order compensation without examining all such witnesses.⁴

whether he thought the explanation satisfactory, and if so, why. Even in the cases where the complainant says nothing more than that the evidence let in is true, the Magistrate should note in his judgment that the complainant had no explanation to offer.³

12 "For reasons to be recorded" — The Magistrate is bound to record his reasons for making an order for compensation. The record of reasons is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of the power.¹ This is so even in summary cases.²

The reasons must go to show why it is that the Magistrate considers the accusation against the accused to be frivolous or vexatious and why, in his opinion, it is a fit case for awarding compensation.³ While Magistrates should be on their guard against frivolous or vexatious complaints they should also at the same time be careful not to deny the protection and redress provided by law against wrong doers.⁴ The policy of the Legislature in requiring reasons to be recorded is to afford an opportunity to an appellate or revising tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons.⁵ The mere statement in the order that in his opinion the evidence is highly unsatisfactory⁶ or that he finds nothing in the explanation to justify that the complaint was not false and either frivolous or vexatious⁷ or that no case is made out against the accused and some of the accused were added vexatiously⁸ is not a good reason for making an order under this section. The reasons must be in addition to and apart from the finding of the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious⁹ such as that the object of the complainant was to harass the accused.¹⁰ But it has been held in some decisions¹¹ that the Magistrate is only bound to give reasons for ordering compensation and not for his finding that the accusation is false and frivolous or vexatious

13. Amount and nature of compensation.—The compensation awarded to each accused should not exceed one hundred rupees. The section does not mean that if there are a number of accused, the total amount awarded to all must not exceed one hundred rupees¹

Money ordered to be paid as compensation under this section is not a *fine*² though it is made recoverable under S 547 as if it were a fine³. The sum awarded as compensation is by way of amends or compensation to the accused and should not be credited to the Government⁴. As to the method of recovery of fines, see S 85C.

The section should not be used as a punitive measure and in awarding compensation the Magistrate should be strictly guided by the loss or inconvenience which the accused has sustained⁵. Any misconduct of the accused may also disentitle him to any compensation⁶.

The powers under this section are to be exercised only in fit and proper cases and not indiscriminately in every case in which the accused is discharged⁷.

14. Who can be ordered to pay compensation.—Compensation under this section can only be awarded against a person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made, and not against a person who did not institute the proceedings but was only examined as a witness¹. Where a judicial officer makes a complaint under S 476 acting in his judicial capacity, it is not to be lightly presumed that his conduct is vexatious or frivolous and no compensation should be awarded against him under this section².

Public officers are not exempted from liability under this section when they make a complaint³. A police officer making a report in a non cognizable case must be taken to be only making a complaint and is not exempt from liability under the section⁴.

The word "person" includes also a "juristic person" like a corporation. So a municipal committee may be ordered to pay compensation under this section⁵. An obiter dictum has been expressed in the undermentioned case⁶ to the effect that there is nothing in the section to make it non applicable to the case of even the Crown.

The question whether a servant is responsible under this section for an information lodged on behalf of his master is one of fact and depends on the question whether the servant is merely the mouth piece of the master or whether he also joins the master in the accusation. In the latter case he is liable⁷.

A guardian or next friend of a minor complainant⁸ or a person who only instigates the giving of false information but who does not himself make the complaint or give the information⁹ cannot be ordered to pay compensation.

15 To whom compensation can be awarded.—A complaint may be well-founded as regards some of the accused and yet vexatious and frivolous as regards others. So where a Magistrate discharges one of the accused, and convicts the other accused, he can award compensation to the accused who is discharged¹.

16. Imprisonment in default of compensation.—Sub-sections (2A) and (2B).—Before the amendment in 1923 a Magistrate had no power to order imprisonment in default of payment of compensation alternatively in the order for payment of compensation itself. He could order imprisonment only after the failure to recover the compensation¹. But now such an order can be made in the order itself.

The Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment in default shall take effect after a term of civil detention which the complainant was undergoing at the time² The term of thirty days' imprisonment can be imposed in respect of each of several accused in whose favour payment of compensation has been ordered though the aggregate term of imprisonment exceeds thirty days³ Where a portion of the compensation is recovered the person ordered to pay compensation is liable to imprisonment only for a proportionate part of the period of one month mentioned in this section¹ [Sub s (2D)]

17. No exemption from civil or criminal liability—Sub section (2C) —

The compensation awarded under this section does not deprive the person compensated of his right to further redress either by a regular civil suit or a criminal prosecution against the person ordered to pay compensation under this section¹

An order for payment of compensation does not debar the Magistrate from directing the prosecution of the complainant under S 476 for an offence under S 211 of the Penal Code² Nor does the starting of the prosecution of the complainant bar an order for compensation under the section³ The question whether a Magistrate is to act under this section or prosecute the complainant under S 211 Penal Code or to do both is in the discretion of the Magistrate himself and depends upon the facts of each particular case If prosecution is necessary on grounds of public policy it would be a wrong exercise of his discretion if he were to act under this section instead of instituting a prosecution If prosecution on the other hand is unnecessary on grounds of public policy an order under

18. Abatement. — Where the accused to whom compensation has been ordered, dies just after the complainant has filed his revision in the High Court no order can be passed on the petition as no notice can be served and no proceedings can be taken against a dead person¹ But where the complainant dies after filing a revision against an order of compensation the application does not abate but can be prosecuted by his legal representative²

Court can go into all the facts of the case, in order to determine whether the case is false and vexatious⁶ But an appellate Court will not set aside an order for compensation except for very cogent reasons inasmuch as the power to award compensation is discretionary with the Magistrate⁷ As to whether additional evidence can be recorded by the appellate Court in an appeal under this section, see Note 3 on S 423

20. Revision.—The High Court has ample jurisdiction to revise and examine an order under this section, in the exercise of its ordinary revisional powers and under S 435,¹ though it will not interfere when no prejudice is caused²

The High Court can also entertain a revision petition in the first instance, though ordinarily it is the practice not to entertain it without its being presented to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate³

An accused person after his acquittal is not an accused within S 439 (2), and hence has no right to be heard in a revision petition against an order for compensation under this section⁴

It has been held that in cross cases while the trying Magistrate should, so far as is possible, keep the evidence produced in each case distinct in his mind, a revisional Court with both cases before it need not confine them in water tight compartments when considering whether an order under this section should or should not be upheld⁵

2. "Warrant-case" — For definition of warrant case, see section 4 (1) (a)

Where the offence is one triable as a warrant case, the fact that a summons instead of a warrant was issued under S 204, does not affect the character of the offence and it cannot be tried as a summons case¹ Similarly, where an offence is triable as a warrant case, the Magistrate cannot split it up into its component parts which constitute minor offences so as to be able to try the case as a summons case²

3. Effect of non-compliance with provisions. — It has been held in the undermentioned cases¹ that where a Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons case and acquits the accused the order of acquittal operates only as an order of discharge under S 253 and not as an order of acquittal. See also Note 19 on S 537

4 Change of procedure subsequent to commencement of trial — Where the offence charged at the commencement of proceedings against the accused is triable as a warrant case and the trial is commenced as a warrant case, it is not open to the Magistrate thereafter to abandon the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases and adopt that of summons cases on the ground that the accused appears to have committed only an offence triable as a summons case, when such course is likely to prejudice the accused in his defence¹ Similarly a Magistrate who has commenced a trial under this chapter (chapter 21) cannot subsequently change the procedure to one under chapter 22 (summary trials) as such a course would be prejudicial to the interests of the accused² But where the irregularity has not in fact occasioned a failure of justice it will not invalidate the trial³

1. Legislative changes

- (1) The Code of 1861 did not contain any express provision entitling the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses before the framing of the charge. The Code of 1872 contained such express provisions (Sections 218, 191, 214). The express provisions were omitted in the later Codes.
- (2) The proviso to subs (1) has been added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 18 [XIII] of 1923 (Of s 200 (aa) and s 214, proviso)

2. Scope of the section — This section requires that the trial of a warrant case must commence with the hearing of the complainant (if any) and the examination of the prosecution witnesses. The Magistrate has no power to forthwith require the accused to state his plea and on his admission of his guilt, convict him without taking any evidence as in a summons-case¹ (See Ss 242 and 243)

- 1 (06) 1 Cri L Jour 231 (231 232) 29 Mad 372, Emperor v Chinappayan

This section, like the other sections in this chapter, applies to warrant cases generally. Hence, it applies to a case started on a police challan.²

3 "Appears or is brought." — This section empowers the Magistrate to proceed with the trial of an accused person whenever he appears or is brought before a Magistrate. The legality or otherwise of the arrest under which the accused is brought before the Magistrate does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the accused.¹

As to the right of the accused to appear by pleader see S 205 and Notes thereon.

4 "Shall proceed to hear the complainant." — This section only requires that the complainant should be heard. It does not require the examination of the complainant on oath.¹

The Magistrate must proceed to hear the case though the complainant wishes to withdraw his complaint.² The reason is that in warrant cases the complainant is not entitled to withdraw his complaint. See S 218 and Notes thereon.

5 "Take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution" — This section casts upon the Magistrate the duty of taking all the evidence produced on behalf of the prosecution unless it is irrelevant.¹ But this duty applies only to the evidence which is ready when the case is taken up for hearing and the Magistrate is not bound to go on taking the evidence that may be offered subsequently from time to time.²

 2 (38) 25 AIR 1938 Nag 103 (104) 39 Cri I Jour 62, Kahat Ali v Md Murad

When a Magistrate, for sufficient reasons refuses to issue a commission, or to move the District Magistrate for issue of a commission, for the examination of a witness, he cannot be deemed to have refused, or omitted to take the evidence produced in support of the prosecution³

When witnesses are common to a number of cases before the Court, the evidence in each case should be taken separately. It is not proper to take the depositions in one case and have them copied and used in another case⁴

As to the right of the prosecution to lead evidence after the accused has entered on his defence, see S 256 and Notes thereon

On general principles the duty of the prosecution is not to work for a conviction, but to see that justice is done and it is bound to produce all witnesses who are acquainted with the facts of the case although they may not favour the prosecution, unless their evidence is unnecessary or there is reasonable ground for believing that they will not speak the truth⁵. Where a material witness is withheld by the prosecution without any sufficient cause, the Court can draw an inference that his evidence if produced will be against the prosecution. See Evidence Act, S 114, Illustration (g)⁶. See also Notes on sections 208, 214 and 286

But it is open to the prosecution to examine its witnesses in any order it chooses. No inference adverse to the prosecution should be drawn from the mere fact that a particular witness was examined last especially when it is not suggested that the accused has suffered any prejudice by such late production of the witness⁷

6 Proviso to sub-section (1). — For cases where the complaint of a Court is necessary for taking cognizance of an offence, see S 195.

7. "Shall ascertain" — Sub-section (2). — The Magistrate is bound under this section to ascertain from the complainant or otherwise the names of any persons who are likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution and he may summon to give evidence before himself such of them as he thinks necessary¹. In discharge of this obligation the Magistrate must specifically question the complainant as to whether he knows of any witnesses who will have to be summoned. The Magistrate is not bound or expected to exercise this duty of ascertaining more than once, and the proper time for such ascertainment is when the evidence already 'produced' in support of the prosecution has been taken.² Further, where before the charge is framed, all the witnesses mentioned in the list of witnesses for prosecution supplied by the police have been examined and the complainant or the officer in charge of the prosecution makes a statement that he closes his case and has no further witnesses to examine, the Magistrate may treat such statement as tantamount to a statement that there are no other persons acquainted with the facts of the case who may be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and he need not specifically question the complainant or the officer in charge of the prosecution on the matter.³

The Magistrate is not bound to summon every one of the witnesses named by the complainant; he must only summon such of the witnesses as he thinks necessary.⁴ But he cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon any witness; he should issue summons to all witnesses named by the complainant, who he considers are likely to give useful evidence.⁵ This power of summoning witnesses named by the complainant may be exercised from time to time as the occasion requires.⁶

The section only authorizes the issue of a summons to a witness, and a warrant for his arrest can be issued only if the conditions laid down in s 90 are satisfied.⁷ See also the undementioned case⁸

It is open to a Magistrate, under this sub section, to take such evidence as he considers necessary, in order to find whether an offence has really been committed or not even if the complainant states that he does not wish to proceed with the complaint⁹

8 Process-fee — See Notes on S 544

9 Production and inspection of documents — Where during the examination of the complainant several documents are produced as evidence against the accused, and are admitted by the Magistrate and marked as exhibits, the accused is entitled to the inspection of all documents filed as exhibits in the case and such inspection should not be refused with the direction that he may apply for and obtain certified copies¹

10 Cross-examination of witnesses — This section does not expressly refer to the right of the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses. But on general principles and under S 133 of the Evidence Act, the liability to cross examination by the adverse party is part of the conception of legal evidence¹ and under sections, like S 214 which also do not expressly confer a right of cross examination, it has been held that such a right undoubtedly exists². But S 256 provides that after the charge is framed the accused must be required to state if he desires to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses and if he says he wishes to do so, the witnesses named by him should be re-called and he should be allowed to cross examine them. The question has arisen as to what is the effect of this provision. Does it impliedly negative the right of the accused to cross examine at an earlier stage, viz., before the charge is framed, or does it confer on the accused an additional right to cross examine the prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras³ and Patna⁴ the Chief Court of Lower Burma⁵ the Judicial Commissioners Courts of Upper Burma⁶ Sind⁷ and Nagpur⁸ that the accused is entitled as of right to cross examine prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed as well as afterwards. But it has been held by the Allahabad⁹ and Calcutta¹⁰ High Courts that the accused is not entitled as of right to cross examine prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed, but is only entitled to do so afterwards under s 256. At the same time the Allahabad¹¹ and Calcutta¹² High Courts have held that s 256 does not prohibit cross-examination by the accused before the charge is framed and the Magistrate can, as a matter of discretion, allow, and indeed will be well advised to allow, the accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed. The Punjab Chief Court also seems to hold the same view.¹³ The question came up for decision before a Bench of the Oudh Chief Court, but the Judges constituting the Bench differed in their opinion, one of them expressing his concurrence with the Madras and Patna view and the other agreeing with the Allahabad and Calcutta view.¹⁴

An accused is entitled to decline to exercise his right of cross-examination (assuming that it is held that he has such a right).¹⁵

The object of cross-examination is to test the truth of the evidence given in chief.¹⁶ But the fact that certain evidence has not been tested by cross-examination does not affect its admissibility but only its probative value.¹⁷

11 Procedure under the section—Trial or inquiry. — See Section 4 (1) (k)

12. Revision — The section leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate as to what witnesses named by the prosecution should be summoned to give evidence before himself and a Court of revision will not interfere with this discretion unless there are strong and exceptional reasons for doing so.¹

(2) The Codes of 1861 and 1872 did not contain any provision corresponding to sub section (2). On the other hand, Explanation III to S 215 of the Code of 1872 expressly declared that an order of discharge could not be passed till after the examination of the witnesses named for the prosecution. This provision was removed and the provision contained in subs (2) was introduced in the later Codes thus rendering obsolete the undermentioned decisions¹ under the prior Codes which held that a Magistrate could not discharge an accused before taking all the evidence for the prosecution.

This section makes it incumbent on the Magistrate to take all the evidence offered on behalf of the prosecution before he discharges the accused¹ unless he finds that the charge against the accused is groundless in which case he can discharge the accused even before he has taken all the prosecution evidence (See Note 6) It has been held that the Magistrate can discharge an accused on the basis of the evidence of a witness called at the instance of accused under s 310, though this section refers only to the evidence for the prosecution²

3. Examination of accused (if any) as he thinks necessary. — This section enables the Magistrate in a warrant case to examine the accused before the charge is framed¹ But such an examination is entirely discretionary with the Magistrate and he is not bound to examine the accused before the charge is framed²

As to whether the examination of an accused before the charge is framed dispenses with the examination of the accused under s 312 after the charge is framed and the prosecution evidence is closed and before the accused is called on to enter upon his defence, see Section 342, Note 9.

As to the scope and effect of an examination of the accused in criminal cases, see Notes on Section 342.

4. "The Magistrate shall discharge him." — This section contemplates an order discharging the accused An order dismissing a complaint is not the proper order to be passed under the section¹ A formal and express order of discharge is, however, not necessary It may be implied and presumed from the circumstances of a case² Thus, where a person is accused of a major offence but the Magistrate frames only a charge for a minor offence there is an implied discharge in respect of the major offence³ To determine whether a particular order is one of discharge the substance of the order and not its form should be taken into consideration. Thus, where no charge has been drawn up and the prisoner has not been asked to make his defence and the Magistrate finds that no case has been made out against the accused, his order is only one of discharge though he styles it as an order of acquittal⁴. Similarly, if the defence of the accused is taken and witnesses are examined in support thereof, the order of the Magistrate where he finds the accused not guilty is one of acquittal though he styles it as one of discharge⁵.

As to whether a Court is bound to hear arguments before discharging an accused, see Section 310 Note 7.

5 Grounds of discharge — Under sub s (1) of this section a Magistrate can discharge an accused when upon considering the evidence for the prosecution he comes to the conclusion that no case has been made out against the accused, which if un rebutted, would warrant his conviction¹. But where the Magistrate has not come to such a conclusion he has no power to discharge the accused under this section. Thus an accused person cannot be discharged under this sub section merely because a civil suit touching the same dispute is pending between the parties² or the complaint is vague³ or because it is desirable to try the accused along with another co accused whose attendance before the Court it has not so far been possible to procure⁴. Similarly except in cases falling under s 259 the absence of the complainant at the hearing is no ground for discharging an accused (see Notes on s 259). But in such a case the accused may be discharged for want of evidence against him⁵. It is not sufficient to enable a Magistrate to discharge an accused person under this section that there can be no conviction for the particular offence which was originally alleged against the accused but only in respect of some other offence⁶ or that the accused appears to have committed the offence only in respect of a smaller sum than that alleged by the prosecution⁷ Where an accused person escapes into a foreign jurisdiction and the Magistrate holding the enquiry in connexion with the extradition proceedings reports that there is no sufficient ground for extradition, this is not by itself a sufficient ground for the discharge of the accused under this section⁸ It is the absence of sufficient evidence for conviction that can justify a discharge under this section

This sub-section unlike sub s (2) does not require a Magistrate to record any reasons for the order of discharge An order merely discharging the accused without giving any reasons will operate as a final order and the discharge will take effect from the date of such order⁹

6. Sub-section (2) — Although sub s (1) of this section requires the Magistrate to take all the evidence for the prosecution before discharging the accused, sub-section (2) empowers the Magistrate to discharge the accused at any previous stage of the case if he finds that the charge against the accused is a groundless one¹ Thus, the accused can be discharged even before any evidence for the prosecution is taken or when such evidence is being taken,² or before the complainant is heard under Section 252,³ or before the date of hearing⁴ The Calcutta⁵ and the Patna⁶ High Courts have held that even an order refusing to issue process for the appearance of the accused may amount to an order of discharge though the Madras High Court has expressed the opinion that neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal can be passed in a case where the accused has not been directed to appear at all⁷ But an order of discharge can be passed only after the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence An order refusing to take cognizance of an offence is, therefore, not an order of discharge⁸ As to whether an order cancelling process issued to

Under this sub section, the Magistrate can discharge the accused before he has taken the evidence for the prosecution if he finds that the charge against the accused is groundless. A finding that the charge is groundless is not the same as a finding under sub s (1) that no case has been made out against the accused¹⁰ In the undermentioned case¹¹ it has been observed that a charge may be said to be groundless when there are no good grounds for the charge.

7. "For reasons to be recorded"—Sub section (2) requires the Magistrate to record his reasons for holding that the charge is groundless. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to when a Magistrate will be justified in holding a charge to be groundless. The Magistrate should arrive at his conclusion judicially and not capriciously.¹ If, acting judicially, a Magistrate has come to the conclusion on grounds to be recorded, that the charge must fail either because the allegations are false or because they disclose a dispute of a civil nature which is distorted into a criminal case or for any other reason, he can discharge the accused without taking the evidence for the prosecution.² In arriving at his conclusion the Magistrate can take into account a police report³ or a civil Court's judgment⁴ touching the dispute. Where the story related by the prosecutor himself is of such a nature that it does not disclose a criminal offence, the Magistrate will be justified in discharging the accused under this sub section without taking the evidence for the prosecution.⁵ Similarly where from the complaint and the complainant's evidence the Magistrate arrives at a conclusion that the defects in the complainant's case could not be made good even if all his witnesses said everything in his favour, the Magistrate would be justified in discharging the accused.

But where the complaint discloses prima facie a case against the accused the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced in support of the charge and unless he considers that even if such evidence were taken into consideration the charge would be groundless⁷ Where a Magistrate discharges an accused without applying his mind to the evidence already before him on the mere ground that the whereabouts of the accused are not known and it is useless to drag on the case indefinitely the order of discharge is illegal⁸

The mere fact that the matter is one of rendition of accounts does not justify a Magistrate in holding a charge of criminal breach of trust to be groundless⁹ In such a case the question of trust must be fully inquired into and for this purpose it is necessary that the whole of the prosecution evidence should be recorded An order of discharge after examination of some of the prosecution witnesses on the ground that the case is of a civil nature is premature¹⁰ Similarly it would not be a proper exercise of the discretion of the Magistrate under this sub section to discharge an accused merely on a statement of a prosecution witness that the complainant had previously admitted that the case was a false one¹¹

A Magistrate should give his reasons at the time he pronounces the order of discharge and if it is the final order in the case he is bound to give his reasons because the moment he pronounces the final order he becomes functus officio But where several accused are being tried before him and he discharges some of them without giving any reasons in the order of discharge it is competent for him to give his reasons in regard to the order of discharge at any time until the charge against the remaining accused is disposed of by a final order¹²

Difference between the Codes of 1861 & 1872 and the later Codes —

- (1) The Codes of 1861 (S 250) and 1872 (S 216) contained the words 'if the Magistrate finds that an offence is apparently proved against the accused person' instead of the words if the Magistrate is of the opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence' which occurred in the later Codes
- (2) The words triable under this Chapter qualifying the word offence' did not occur in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 but were inserted in the later Codes
- (3) The Code of 1872 S 216 contained two explanations the provisions of which have now been transferred to S 570

Changes made in 1898 —

The words or at any previous stage of the crime were first inserted in the Code of 1898

2 "When such evidence and examination have been taken and made" — The section contemplates that in warrant cases the Magistrate should take the evidence for the prosecution before framing a charge. In this respect the procedure is different from that adopted in summons cases where at the very commencement of the proceedings the particulars of the offence are explained to the accused and he is required to state his plea¹. This section authorizes the Magistrate to take into consideration the statement of the accused person himself in framing a charge against him. Hence, in a proper case, the Magistrate will be within his powers in framing a charge on the mere statement of the accused himself².

See also Notes on Section 253

3 "Or at any previous stage" — Under this section the Magistrate is not bound in every case to take the whole of the evidence for the prosecution before framing a charge. He is entitled to frame a charge even before the evidence for the prosecution has been completely recorded, at any moment he is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out against the accused¹. It may be noted in this connexion that the procedure in this respect is different in inquiries before commitment to sessions, in that it is obligatory in such inquiries for the Magistrate in every case to take the entire evidence produced on either side before framing a charge² See S 208 and Notes thereon, see also S 210

4. "Ground for presuming" — The section does not require the Magistrate to give reasons for holding that there are good grounds for framing a charge¹ In forming his opinion as to whether there is sufficient ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, it is open to the Magistrate to disbelieve the evidence given by the prosecution witnesses. Merely because the prosecution examines a number of witnesses who depose to the guilt of the accused, it is not obligatory on the Magistrate, if he disbelieves them, to frame a charge² When the evidence recorded does not lead to a presumption that the accused has committed an offence but merely raises a doubt, the Magistrate should give the benefit of doubt to the accused and discharge him³ Although the section contemplates the framing of a charge only when a prima facie case has been made out against the accused by the prosecution, it is up to the Magistrate to consider the whole of the evidence and the probabilities of the case at the time of proceeding to judgment and he may acquit an accused against whom he has framed a charge though the accused has failed to adduce any satisfactory evidence to rebut the evidence for the prosecution⁴ The discretion of the Magistrate in framing a charge under this section should not be lightly interfered with in revision⁵

5. "Offence triable under this Chapter" — Where a Magistrate commences a case as a warrant case, he can convict the accused of an offence triable as a summons case when he finds that only such an offence has been committed¹ As seen in Note 4 on S 251, in such a case it is not open to the Magistrate to abandon the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases and adopt that of summons cases. It is necessary for the Magistrate to frame a charge even in such cases² The contrary view taken in the under-mentioned cases cannot be supported³ It has been seen in Notes on S 241 that in a joint trial of two offences one of which is triable as a warrant case and the other as a summons case, the procedure prescribed in respect of the graver charge should be followed in regard to both the offences. Hence, in such a case the charge should be framed even in respect of the offence triable as a summons case⁴.

The section does not restrict the power of the Magistrate to frame a charge to cases where the offence disclosed on the evidence is the same as the one mentioned in the complaint or police report on which cognizance was taken. A Magistrate can and ought to frame a charge for the offence made out on the evidence though it may be different from the one alleged in the complaint or police report provided that the other conditions mentioned in the section are present⁵.

As to the procedure to be followed where the offence disclosed is exclusively triable by a Court of Session or is one which in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court, see S 317 and Notes thereon.

6 "Which, in his opinion could be adequately punished by him." — The section contemplates that a charge should be framed under it only when the offence is one for which, in the opinion of the Magistrate, he can award an adequate punishment. If, in his opinion, he cannot do so, he cannot frame a charge and try the case¹. In such a case he must follow the procedure laid down in S 346 or S 347. It has, however, been held in the undermentioned Burma cases² that the provisions of this section are subject to those of S 349 and that under that section it is competent to a Magistrate of the second or third class to frame a charge against the accused in a case which he has jurisdiction to try even though at the time of framing the charge he is of the opinion that he cannot award adequate punishment for the offence and intends, if the accused is proved to be guilty, to submit the proceedings under that section to the District or Sub divisional Magistrate to pass sentence.

As to whether this section precludes the Magistrate from committing a case to the Court of Session when he is not of the opinion that he cannot adequately punish the offence, see Note 4 on S 317.

(A Magistrate's discretion on the question of adequacy of punishment is subject to examination by the High Court in revision)

Also see S. 319, Note 9.

7 Magistrate shall frame a charge — Unlike in summons cases (see S 242) in warrant cases it is obligatory on the Magistrate to draw up a formal charge¹ in every case where he holds that a prima facie case has been made out by the prosecution and the other conditions laid down in the section are fulfilled. The duty is cast on the Magistrate to frame a charge and he must be careful to see that the charge while it alleges all that is necessary to constitute the offence charged does not contain any unnecessary allegation. Further, the charge ought not to allege positively anything of which the allegation in a positive form is not justified by the materials before the Court. The prosecution is entitled to insist that the charge be so framed by the Court as not to cast on it any unnecessary burden.² In framing a charge the Magistrate must be solely guided by the offence disclosed on the evidence and should not be influenced by any other considerations.³ As to the consequences of a failure to frame a formal charge see S 530 and Notes thereon.

Where in a joint trial of several accused charged with several offences the Magistrate after taking the prosecution evidence considers that a prima facie case has been made out against all the accused but is faced with the difficulty that misjoinder of charges would result if charges are framed against all the accused he can in the exercise of his inherent powers order a de novo trial with regard to some of the accused.⁴

As to the procedure to be followed where the offence disclosed is exclusively triable by the Court of Session or for other reason the Magistrate considers the case to be a fit one for commitment to the Court of Session see S 317 and Notes thereon.

As to whether a charge need be drawn up in a warrant case tried summarily see Ss 263 and 264 and Notes thereon.

As to the power of the Magistrate to discharge the accused where the complainant fails to appear on the date of hearing see S 259 and Notes thereon.

As to the effect of committing to the sessions a case which the Magistrate himself ought to try after framing a charge under this section see S 347 Note 4.

8 Charge—What it should contain — See Sections 291 to 293.

9, Effect of the framing of the charge — As to whether the fact that a charge is framed in respect of a less serious offence amounts to a discharge of the accused in respect of a more serious offence alleged against the accused see Note 4 on S 253.

255.† (1) The charge shall then be read and explained to the accused, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make.

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate shall record the plea, and may in his discretion convict him thereon.

1. Legislative changes — The words "and explained" were first inserted in Section 217 of the Code of 1872

2. Applicability of the section to security cases. — This section applies only to an inquiry under S 117 where security proceedings are taken for good behaviour except in so far as the framing of a charge and the reading of the same to the accused is concerned. In such an inquiry, therefore, the Magistrate may ask the accused if he pleads guilty.¹

3. "Read and explained" — The charge must be read and explained by the Magistrate himself and not by his clerk or Amlah.¹ The accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the charge brought against him.² It should, therefore, be so explained as to make the accused clearly understand the nature of the charge.³

The aggravating circumstances of the offence, if any, must also be made known to the accused.⁴

4. "Shall be asked." — The accused cannot be called upon to plead until a charge is framed upon the evidence recorded and the charge has been read and explained to him.

Where a Magistrate convicts the accused on his own admission without recording evidence and without framing a charge, the conviction is liable to be set aside.¹

5. Plea of guilty, what is. — A plea of guilty is an admission of all the facts on which the charge is founded, as well as an admission of guilt in respect of them.¹ &

to appear by his pleader.² See also S 271, Note 10 and S 340, Note 9

A plea of self-defence is not inconsistent with a plea of not guilty and consequently where the accused pleads not guilty and in the course of the argument his pleader advances the plea of self-defence, it is the duty of the Court to admit the plea and say upon the facts of the case what offence, if any, has been committed.³ In the undermentioned case⁴ it was held that, though the Court could not at the trial convict an accused merely upon the admission of his pleader, yet, in an appeal, the appellate Court could act upon an admission of fact made in the appeal by his pleader, especially where it does not cause prejudice to the accused.

8. Plea of guilty by one of several co-accused — Effect of such admission. — A plea of guilty by one of several co-accused may be taken into consideration against the other accused only where the latter are "tried jointly" with the former within the meaning of S 30 of the Evidence Act. In a variant case, it is only after the prosecution evidence is over that a charge is framed and the accused pleads guilty. In such a case, all the accused may be said to be tried jointly and the plea of one accused may be considered against the others also.¹ The case is, however, different in the session-trial where the accused's plea of guilty is recorded at the outset of the trial. An accused who then pleads guilty and is convicted on his plea cannot be held to be "tried jointly" with the others against whom the case proceeds under S 272.² Where some of the accused jointly tried plead guilty and are convicted and sentenced on their plea, they can be examined as witnesses against the other accused and it is not for the latter to object that the plea of guilty of the former should not have been accepted.³ See also S 271, Note 15

The above sums up the position on the case-law, as to whether an accused person who pleads guilty can be said to be "tried jointly" with the other accused within the meaning of S 30 of the Evidence Act. But another question arises in regard to this matter, viz, can a plea of guilty be taken to be a confession "proved" within the meaning of S 30 of the Evidence Act? Section 312, Note 27 may be referred to in this connection.

9. Shall be recorded — The proceedings must show that the plea of the accused has been recorded. A conviction based upon a plea not so recorded is bad.¹

A plea of guilty must be so recorded as to avoid any misapprehension or mistake. As far as possible the very words used by the accused must be employed. Where there is an exculpatory statement before the charge, the exact words of a plea of guilty should be recorded by question and answer.² The whole and not part of the accused's statement accompanying the plea should be recorded.³ Where the plea of the accused is interpreted to the Court, the language in which the plea should be recorded is the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter⁴

10 "May in his discretion convict." — Under this section, the Magistrate may convict the accused on his plea of guilty without calling upon him to enter upon his defence. But he is not bound to do so¹ In an ordinary criminal case, however (to which possibly a charge of murder is the only exception) the Court should, as a general rule accept the plea of guilty and act upon it. It would be a waste of public time to hold an elaborate inquiry in such cases² But the plea of guilty must be clear and unambiguous and embrace all the elements of the offence charged. Where the accused admits some or all the facts alleged by the prosecution but pleads 'not guilty,' the proper course for the Court is to proceed with the trial³

Where the offence is not proved upon the evidence, the accused cannot be convicted even though he does not deny the offence⁴

Where an accused pleads guilty but the act complained of does not amount to an offence, the so called plea of guilty is no more than an admission on the part of the accused that he had committed the act which is alleged to be an offence. But the question whether the act complained of does or does not constitute an offence according to law is obvious; one for the Court to decide and hence the accused cannot be convicted merely on his plea of guilty⁵

11 Effect of non compliance with the section — The record must show that the procedure laid down in the section was followed. Where the record does not show that the charge was read and explained to the accused¹ or that the accused was asked to plead² the conviction is liable to be set aside on the ground of prejudice to the accused

255A. In a case where a previous conviction is charged under the provisions of section 221, sub-section (7), and the accused does not admit that he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge, the Magistrate may, after he has convicted the said accused under section 255, sub-section (2), or section 258, take evidence in respect of the alleged previous conviction, and shall record a finding thereon

1. Scope of the section. — This section is new and was introduced into the Code by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 18 [XVIII] of 1923. It provides that evidence of a previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment to be awarded can be taken only after the Magistrate has convicted the accused¹. It gives effect to the undermentioned decisions² which held that it was illegal to take such evidence before the conviction. The undermentioned decision³ which took a contrary view is now obsolete.

This section read with S 221 (7) shows that for the purpose of framing a charge in respect of a previous conviction, no evidence need be taken about the previous conviction.⁴ The necessity for taking such evidence will arise only subsequently, and that only where the accused has been convicted on the substantive charge and does not admit the previous conviction⁵.

2 Admission of previous conviction by accused. — The combined effect of S 221 (7) and this section is that the accused is to be charged with the substantive offence and at the same time, in anticipation, with the previous convictions. If the previous convictions are set forth in the charge and if the charge has been read over and explained to the accused and he pleads guilty to it without any reservation, he is admitting the previous convictions within the meaning of the section¹. In such a case, evidence of the previous conviction need not be taken. The mere admission by the accused that he had been in jail once is not sufficient to show that he pleaded guilty to a previous conviction for an offence rendering him liable to enhanced punishment².

3 May, after conviction — See Note 1

4 Evidence of previous conviction — Whenever it is required to prove a previous conviction against an accused for the purpose of enhancement of punishment such previous conviction must be proved strictly and in accordance with law¹. The accused must

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

In 1872 a sub clause was added by which the accused's written statement, if any, might be received and filed with the record

Differences between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

- (1) Instead of the clause "if the accused person . . . to enter upon the sine" the clause "if the accused refuses to plead . . . to enter upon his defence" was inserted. The decision bearing on the interpretation of the former expression¹ is only of academic interest now.
- (2) For the words "to produce his witnesses if in attendance" ² the words "to produce his evidence" were substituted in 1882.
- (3) The clause "and shall, at any time while he is making his defence, be allowed to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, present in Court or its precincts" was substituted for the clause "and shall be allowed to recall and cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution" occurring in the Code of 1872.
- (4) In the clause regarding the filing of the written statement of the accused the word "shall" was substituted for the word "may" and the words "but shall not be bound to do so" were omitted.

Differences between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

In the 1898 Code after the words "if the accused refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried" the words "he shall be required to state . . . they shall also be charged" were added. At the same time, the provision in the Code of 1882 by which the accused was given the right to "recall and cross examine prosecution witnesses at any time while making his defence" was repealed and it was provided that the accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence after the examination, cross examination, and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses.

Changes made by Act 18 [XVIII] of 1923 —

After the words "he shall be required to state" the words "at the commencement of the next hearing of the case . . . forthwith" were added, thereby requiring the Magistrate to ask the accused if he wished to cross examine the prosecution witnesses already examined, not on the day on which a charge is framed, but at the next hearing only, unless for reasons to be recorded in writing the Magistrate thinks fit to put the question on the same day as he frames the charge.

2. Scope and applicability of the section —Section 256 provides that when it is accused pleads guilty in a warrant-case the Magistrate may convict him upon such plea.

Section 256 — Note 1

2. (69) 11 South W R Cr 15 (15), Queen v Tolaram (Witnesses not in attendance — Failure to ask accused to produce evidence not a flaw)

This section provides for the procedure to be followed when the accused does not plead guilty. It provides inter alia that the accused should be asked to state whether he wishes to cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken and if he so wishes the witnesses named by him should be recalled and he should be allowed to cross examine them. It has been seen in the Notes on S 252 that in variant cases the accused can be allowed to cross examine the prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed. The present section confers on the accused an opportunity of cross examining the prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed. The reason for this provision is that in variant cases the accused is in a position to know the exact case he has to meet only after the charge is framed.¹ As to whether the accused is entitled as of right to cross examine the prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed see Notes on S 252.

A second opportunity to cross-examine prosecution witnesses is vouchsafed to the accused only in warrant cases. The accused has no such right in summons cases. But where a case is commenced as a warrant case but subsequently it appears that only an offence triable as a summons case has been committed, it is not open to the Magistrate to suddenly revert to the procedure of summons cases; he is bound to allow the accused further opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses if he so desires² (See Notes on S 201). Similarly, as has been seen in the Notes on S 241 where a summons case and a warrant case are tried together the procedure prescribed for warrant cases should be followed. In such a case also if the Magistrate finds that the charge in respect of the warrant case is unsustainable and decides to proceed with the other offence alone it is not open to him to deny to the accused the opportunity of further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses provided for by this section³.

Section 263 provides that in warrant cases tried summarily the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases should be followed. Section 263 provides that in summary trials in cases in which no appeal lies a formal charge need not be drawn up. The question has arisen whether this section (S 263) applies to warrant cases tried summarily in which a charge is not framed. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta⁴, Madras⁵, Nagpur⁶ and Patna⁷ and the

1. Tolaram (Witness not in attendance — Failure to ask

This section provides for the procedure to be followed when the accused does not plead guilty. It provides inter alia that the accused should be asked to state whether he wishes to cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken and if he so wishes, the witnesses named by him should be recalled and he should be allowed to cross examine them. It has been seen in the Notes on S 252 that in warrant cases the accused can be allowed to cross examine the prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed. The present section confers on the accused an opportunity of cross examining the prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed. The reason for this provision is that in warrant cases the accused is in a position to know the exact case he has to meet only after the charge is framed.¹ As to whether the accused is entitled as of right to cross examine the prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed, see Notes on S 252.

A second opportunity to cross examine prosecution witnesses is vouchsafed to the accused only in warrant cases. The accused has no such right in summons cases. But where a case is commenced as a warrant case but subsequently it appears that only an offence triable as a summons case has been committed, it is not open to the Magistrate to suddenly revert to the procedure of summons cases, he is bound to allow the accused further opportunity of cross examining the prosecution witnesses if he so desires.² (See Notes on S 251.) Similarly, as has been seen in the Notes on S 211, where a summons case and a warrant case are tried together, the procedure prescribed for warrant cases should be followed. In such a case also if the Magistrate finds that the charge in respect of the warrant case is unsustainable and decides to proceed with the other offence alone, it is not open to him to deny to the accused the opportunity of further cross examination of the prosecution witnesses provided for by this section.³

Section 262 provides that in warrant cases tried summarily the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant cases should be followed. Section 263 provides that in summary trials, in cases in which no appeal lies, a formal charge need not be drawn up. The question has arisen whether this section (S 256) applies to warrant cases tried summarily in which a charge is not framed. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta,⁴ Madras,⁵ Nagpur⁶ and Patna⁷ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁸ relying on the general provisions of s 262, that the section applies to such cases notwithstanding the absence of a formal charge. But, on the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay⁹ and the Chief Court of Oudh¹⁰

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

In 1872 a sub clause was added by which the accused's written statement if any might be received and filed with the record

Differences between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

- (1) Instead of the clause 'if the accused person to enter upon the same the clause if the accused refuses to plead to enter upon his defence was inserted The decision bearing on the interpretation of the former expression is only of academic interest now
- (2) For the words 'to produce his witnesses if in attendance' the words 'to produce his evidence' were substituted in 1882
- (3) The clause 'and shall at any time while he is making his defence be allowed to recall and cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution present in Court or its precincts' was substituted for the clause 'and shall be allowed to recall and cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution' occurring in the Code of 1872
- (4) In the clause regarding the filing of the written statement of the accused the word 'shall' was substituted for the word 'may' and the words 'but shall not be bound to do so' were omitted

Differences between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

In the 1898 Code after the words 'if the accused refuses to plead or does not plead or claims to be tried' the words 'he shall be required to state they shall also be charged' were added At the same time the provision in the Code of 1882 by which the accused was given the right to 'recall and cross examine prosecution witnesses at any time while making his defence' was repealed and it was provided that the accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence after the examination cross examination and examination of the prosecution witnesses

Changes made by Act 18 [XVIII] of 1923 —

After the words 'he shall be required to state' the words 'at the commencement of the next hearing of the case forthwith' were added, thereby requiring the Magistrate to ask the accused if he wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses already examined not on the day on which a charge is framed but at the next hearing, unless for reasons to be recorded in writing the Magistrate thinks fit to put it off for the same day as he frames the charge

2 Scope and applicability of the section —Section 256 provides that when the accused pleads guilty in a warrant case the Magistrate may convict him upon such plea

1 v Totaram (Witnesses not in attendance — Failure to do so)

This section provides for the procedure to be followed when the accused does not plead guilty. It provides inter alia that the accused should be asked to state whether he wishes to cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken and if he so wishes the witnesses named by him should be recalled and he should be allowed to cross examine them. It has been seen in the Notes on S 252 that in warrant cases the accused can be allowed to cross examine the prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed. The present section confers on the accused an opportunity of cross examining the prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed. The reason for this provision is that in warrant cases the accused is in a position to know the exact case he has to meet only after the charge is framed.¹ As to whether the accused is entitled as of right to cross examine the prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed see Notes on S 252.

A second opportunity to cross examine prosecution witnesses is provided to the accused only in warrant cases. The accused has no such right in summons cases. But where a case is commenced as a warrant case but subsequently it appears that only an offence triable as a summons case has been committed it is not open to the Magistrate to suddenly revert to the procedure of summons cases. He is bound to allow the accused further opportunity of cross examining the prosecution witnesses if he so desires.² (See Notes on S 251.) Similarly as has been seen in the Notes on S 211 where a summons case and a warrant case are tried together the procedure prescribed for warrant cases should be followed. In such a case also if the Magistrate finds that the charge in respect of the warrant case is unsustainable and decides to proceed with the other offence alone it is not open to him to deny to the accused the opportunity of further cross examination of the prosecution witnesses provided for by this section.³

that the section does not apply to such cases as it only contemplates cases where a charge is framed.

As a general rule, the cross examination of a witness should be made immediately after his examination in chief is over and the cross examination cannot be reserved till the other witnesses have been examined unless the Court, in its discretion, permits the cross-examination to be reserved. This section provides an exception to this general rule because it entitles an accused person in a warrant case to defer the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses till the witnesses have been examined and a charge is framed.¹¹

The section applies not only to cases where the charge is framed before the prosecution has completed its evidence, but also to cases where the charge is framed after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined in chief¹²

As to the applicability of the section to proceedings for the taking of security for good behaviour, see Section 117, Note 4

As to the applicability of the section to proceedings under § 145, see Notes on that section.

As to whether the accused is entitled to cross examine prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed in preliminary inquiries before commitment to sessions, see Section 213, Note 7

3 "Refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried"—If the accused "refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried," the procedure laid down in this section should be followed. The expression "claims to be tried" includes cases where the accused pleads not guilty. Where the accused denies the charge and pleads not guilty, he is entitled to be dealt with under this section although he may admit all or any of the allegations of the prosecution¹. The procedure provided in the section should be followed not only when the accused pleads not guilty or claims to be tried but also where he refuses to plead at all or does not plead². The effect of this provision is that an accused is not bound to answer at all any question put to him and can, if he likes, decline to plead. Hence, by declining to plead he does not commit any offence under section 179 of the Penal Code³.

Does the expression 'claims to be tried' in this section show that in warrant cases the 'trial' does not begin till the charge is framed and the accused claims to be tried? For a discussion on this question, see Notes on Section 4 (i) (k).

4. The accused shall be required to state. — This provision, requiring the Magistrate to ask the accused if he wishes to cross examine the prosecution witnesses examined before charge, was introduced for the first time in the Code of 1893. In two old decisions, one of the High Court of Calcutta decided in the year 1876¹ and the other of the High Court of Allahabad decided in 1871,² it was laid down that the Magistrate before discharging the prosecution witnesses should ask the accused if he required them for his further cross-examination. That was suggested only as a rule of convenience. Now, the Magistrate is bound to question the accused on that point it has been made a statutory duty on the part of the Magistrate. It is of vital importance that the accused should in all cases be asked at the appropriate time if he wishes to cross examine the prosecution witnesses.³ But as to whether such an omission is a material irregularity or not see Note 20 on Section 537.

The Code does not explicitly require the Magistrate to record the fact that he has observed the provisions of this section. But it is a safe and sound rule that when the law requires anything to be done, the fact that this has been done should be recorded.⁴ Hence, it is important that the record must show that the Magistrate has complied with the provisions of the section by questioning the accused in the manner laid down therein.⁵

5 "At the commencement of the next hearing" — There was no provision in the section as it stood originally in the Code of 1898 as to the particular time at which the accused was to be asked to state whether he wishes to cross examine any and if so which of the prosecution witnesses.¹ Under these circumstances it was held in the undermentioned case² that the re cross examination of the prosecution witnesses must be made immediately after the charge was framed. Under the section as amended in 1923, it has been provided that the accused should be required to state at the next hearing whether he wished to cross examine any witnesses unless the Magistrate, for reasons to be recorded by him thinks fit to require him to do so immediately. The object of the provision is to give the accused sufficient time to consider whether he should cross examine the prosecution witnesses.³

A Magistrate can adjourn the case to a later date solely for the purpose of asking the accused whether he wishes to cross examine the prosecution witnesses, and, if he does so it cannot be said that the proceedings on the adjourned date are not a 'hearing' merely because no other action is to be taken on that date.⁴

If the Magistrate requires the accused to state on the same date on which the charge is framed, whether he wishes to cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses, he should record his reasons for doing so.⁵ But it is not so much the recording of reasons as the adequacy thereof which should count in the determination of the question whether the provisions of the section have been complied with. If no good reasons are forthcoming the mere fact they have been recorded by the Magistrate in writing will not save the trial from the taint of irregularity. As a general rule, sufficient time must be allowed to the accused to consider and decide whether he should cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he wishes to do so⁶.

Good adequate and cogent reasons should be given for requiring the accused to state his intention on the same day.⁷ That it is the usual practice of the Magistrate to ask the accused to state his intention on the same day is not a sufficient reason.⁸ That the Magistrate had to go out for urgent work or that the prosecution witnesses had to leave the place of trial immediately is not a good reason for requiring the accused to state forthwith if he wishes to cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses.⁹ But the fact that the prosecution witnesses come from a Native State and it would take a long time to secure their attendance again was held to be a sufficient reason.¹⁰ The convenience of the Magistrate and the witnesses alone should not be considered. In a Madras case¹¹ where the Magistrate required the accused to state his intention on the same day and recorded the reason the accused is undefended Pandarum J. held that the reason was good and sufficient and observed that the Magistrate might have considered that as the accused had not engaged a pleader not appeared desirous of doing so it would simply be a waste of time to defer the question till the next hearing. But it is submitted that this reasoning is not sound as the fact that the accused is not represented by a lawyer is rather a reason for allowing him time for considering whether he should cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses than for denying him such time.¹²

It has been held in the undermentioned case¹³ that it would make no difference to the accused if the question is put to him on the date when the charge is framed and not on the next date when the witnesses for the prosecution are present and are in fact cross-examined.

As to the consequence of the failure to record reasons see Note 20 on S 53⁷

Though under this section the accused is entitled to an adjournment to decide what witnesses if any he should cross-examine it is open to his counsel to waive the right to such adjournment and where he does so the failure to adjourn the case cannot be objected to later on.¹⁴

As regards (a) it has been seen in the Notes on S 252 that there is a conflict of decisions as to whether the accused is entitled as of right to cross examine prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed. See Notes on S 232

But as regards the right of cross examination granted under this section it is an absolute right and the Magistrate has no power to disallow such cross examination² The accused is not bound to show that he has reasonable grounds for exercising his right under the section³ The fact that the witnesses have been already cross examined by him before the charge does not deprive him of his right to cross examine them again under this section⁴ It has been held that even if the previous cross examination was on the distinct understanding that the accused would not require the witnesses to be recalled for further cross examination after the charge he cannot be deprived of his rights under this section if he wishes to exercise them⁵ If there are more than one accused each of them should be given an opportunity to cross examine the witnesses⁶ The accused should be given a full and reasonable opportunity to exercise his right under the section and he should be allowed sufficient time to engage a pleader to cross examine the witnesses⁷

This section does not prescribe the order in which the accused should cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. In these circumstances under S 135, Evidence Act, the matter is left to the discretion of the Magistrate and in a proper case he may allow the accused to cross examine the witnesses in any order he chooses⁶

Where a witness for the prosecution is examined on commission under the provisions of Chapter XL of this Code it is open to an accused person to refrain from putting in any interrogatories when the commission is first issued, and to apply, after the charge has been framed against him, for the issue of the commission together with his cross interrogatories for the purpose of the cross examination of the witness⁷

As to the point of time up to which the accused can exercise his right to have prosecution witnesses recalled for cross examination under this section see Note 7

Below are given some decisions bearing on the extent to which cross examination may be allowed¹⁰

7. Waiver of the right under this section — Under the Codes of 1872 and 1861 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the right to cross examine was exercisable at any time. One set of cases¹ holding that the accused could claim the right at any time before the trial closed or after the close of the examination of his own witnesses, unless he had previously expressly abandoned it and another set of cases² holding that the right should be exercised at the time when the charge framed was read and explained to the accused and that if not exercised at that time it could not afterwards be insisted on, though the Magistrate had a discretion to permit such cross examination. But the Code of 1882 specifically laid down that the accused shall at any time while he is making his defence be allowed to re call and cross examine any witness for the prosecution.

The present section has altered this procedure. It makes it quite clear that the accused is not entitled after he has entered upon his defence to insist upon re calling and cross examining any of the prosecution witnesses examined before the charge.³ If he does not exercise his right at the proper time and begins to adduce his own evidence he will be deemed to have waived his right and cannot thereafter claim to exercise it.⁴ But as the right accrues only after the charge is framed it cannot be deemed to be waived by a statement by the accused or his pleader before the charge that he would not require any witnesses to be re called for further cross examination after the charge is framed.⁵

8 Recall and discharge of the witnesses — Under the Code of 1882 the accused was given the right to re call and cross examine the prosecution witnesses present in Court or its precincts.¹ But these words have been deleted in the Code of 1898. The question has arisen under this Code whether the right of cross examination of the prosecution witnesses examined before the charge conferred by this section applies only to witnesses who have not been discharged or applies also to witnesses who have been discharged. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand it has been held by the High Courts of Madras² and Allahabad³ that this section applies only to cases where the prosecution witnesses required for cross examination have not been discharged and that where they have been discharged the accused is not entitled to have them re summoned under this section but they can only be re summoned in the discretion of the Magistrate under S 257. But on the other hand it has been held by the Calcutta High Court⁴ that the right of the accused under this section applies also to prosecution witnesses who have been discharged. It is submitted that the Calcutta view seems to be the better view as it is more consistent with the repeal of the words "present in Court or its precincts" which occurred in the previous Code as there is no reason to restrict the meaning of the word "recalled" so as to exclude the sense of "re summoning" as suggested by the Allahabad and Madras rulings cited above. See also the undermentioned case⁵

The stage at which the prosecution witnesses can be recalled follows and not precedes the statement of the accused pleading guilty or not guilty. This stage is not reached until the statement of the accused has actually been recorded. Hence, it is not open to a Magistrate to direct a complainant to bring his witnesses for cross examination before the statement of the accused pleading guilty or not guilty has been recorded⁶

9. Examination of the remaining witnesses.—The words "remaining witnesses" do not necessarily refer only to those witnesses who have been named by the complainant as required by S 252, sub s (2) and summoned by the Magistrate before the framing of the charge, these words include any witness who according to the prosecution is able to support its case, though he has not been summoned or named by the prosecution before the framing of the charge¹. But the High Court of Allahabad has taken a contrary view in the undermentioned case². The High Courts of Lahore and Nagpur have also followed the Allahabad High Court in the cases cited below³. The mere fact that certain witnesses are not present in Court does not prevent them from being included in the words "remaining witnesses" within the meaning of this section. But the prosecution is not entitled to get an adjournment of the case as of right in order to secure the attendance of such witnesses⁴.

There is no obligation on the prosecution to tender witnesses, who were cited but who were not called to give evidence, for cross examination of the defence⁵ (see also S 252, Note 5)

9a Production of documents by prosecution during cross-examination of prosecution witnesses.—This section as well as S 252 does not prohibit the admission of relevant and admissible evidence at any stage of the trial. Hence it is not illegal for a Magistrate to allow documents to be produced by the prosecution while the prosecution witnesses are being cross-examined by the accused.¹

10 "The accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence"—The accused can be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence only after the charge has been framed. He is asked for an answer after the examination in chief, cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses including the re-examination of such of them as were examined before the charge.¹ After the accused enters on his defence no further evidence can be admitted against him except under the provisions of S 540.² See notes on S 540.

The section only requires the Magistrate to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence and to produce his evidence. It does not require him to ask the accused if he means to call witnesses or not.³ It is a right of the accused to be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence and an omission to ask him to do so is a flaw in disallowed by the Court¹³ The burden of proving the guilt of the accused is on the prosecution and it cannot succeed merely because of the weakness¹⁴ or falseness¹⁵ of the case for the defence

Though the onus of proving that the case of the accused falls within one of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is on him, it is not necessary that he should specifically raise such plea. Thus, a Court is bound to consider the plea of private defence as appearing from the prosecution evidence even though it is not specifically pleaded by the accused¹⁶

The right of the accused to produce evidence in his defence under this section is one that can be waived and if the accused when asked to produce his evidence has said that he has no witnesses to examine, he will not afterwards be entitled to let in any evidence¹⁷

It is not obligatory on the accused to submit a list of witnesses at the stage of the trial reached under S 256. If he wishes the Court to summon the witnesses, necessarily he must give their names. But if he can produce them in Court without the assistance of the

12. Written statement of accused — This is the only section in the Code which provides for the filing of a written statement by the accused¹ There is no provision in the Code for the filing of a written statement in sessions trials (see S. 290, Note 6) or in preliminary inquiries before commitment to sessions² or in summons cases

Under this section the Court is bound to receive and file the written statement submitted by the accused³ Though great weight is to be attached to the written statement filed by the accused,⁴ it is not like a pleading in a civil suit and does not preclude the raising of any defence not mentioned in the written statement⁵

It has been held by the Madras High Court⁶ that the right to file a written statement under this section carries with it the right to file any documents to which the accused was a party and that as the accused cannot give evidence on oath the Court is bound to consider such documents, though not proved in the regular way

The section does not specify the point of time at which the written statement is to be filed under this section It has been said that the written statement is to be filed at the time of recording the accused's plea to the charge⁷

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether the filing of a written statement by the accused under this section dispenses with his oral examination after the close of the prosecution evidence under S 312 (See Note 18 on S 312) But the fact that a written statement has been filed may be taken into consideration in determining whether the accused was prejudiced by the failure to comply with the provisions of Section 312⁸

It has been held in the undermentioned case⁹ that a written statement put in by the accused under this section can be used to fill up gaps in the prosecution case

Process for compelling production of evidence at instance of accused applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination, or the production of any document or other thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing.

Provided that, when the accused has cross examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court.

2 "After he has entered upon his defence." — This section comes into play only after the accused has entered on his defence¹ The accused is entitled to a reasonable interval for considering what evidence he should produce² It is open to a Magistrate even after a case has been closed, at any time before judgment is pronounced, to allow the accused to let in evidence, it depends on the circumstances of each case whether a belated application for the production of evidence should be granted or not³

Where, after the close of the evidence for the defence, the Magistrate examines witnesses on the side of the prosecution, the accused is entitled to an opportunity to rebut the new evidence⁴

2a Right of prosecution to lead evidence after accused has entered on his defence — Where the accused leads evidence of good character by way of defence, the Code does not entitle the prosecution to lead rebutting evidence as a matter of right But the Magistrate may, in his discretion, allow such evidence to be given¹

3 Right of accused to apply for process for compelling attendance of witnesses — This section makes it obligatory on the part of the Magistrate except in the cases specified therein, to issue process at the instance of the accused to compel the attendance of the witnesses named by him¹ A non compliance with the section in this

Under this section the accused is entitled to compel the appearance as a witness even of the trying Magistrate himself and to enable the accused to do so, the case should be transferred to some other Court if he applies for such transfer¹⁰

That Magistrate can issue a process who is seized of the case and not any other Magistrate¹¹

Where an application is made under this section for summoning witness the Magistrate must deal with the application and pass an order either granting or refusing it merely keeping it on the file is not proper¹²

4. Reasons for refusal to issue process—The right of the accused to claim the issue of process under this section to compel the production of evidence on his behalf is not an absolute one. The Magistrate can refuse to issue process at his instance if he considers that the application for process has been made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice¹. But the Magistrate must consider the case of each witness individually before deciding that the application with reference to him has been made for any of the purposes specified in the section². Further, the section requires that the Magistrate must record his reasons for refusing to issue process in compliance with the accused's application³. But it has been held that the Magistrate's order need not expressly state that the application for process has been made for the purpose of vexation or delay and that it is sufficient if it states facts which lead to the conclusion that the application has been made for such a purpose⁴.

An application for process under this section can be refused only on the ground of its having been made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The mere fact that the Magistrate thinks that the evidence of the proposed witness will not be material is not sufficient for refusing the application for process⁵. Similarly, the fact that a particular witness is an Amil of certain place or he does not live in the District in which the accused lives or he is a Member of the Legislative Assembly or a Minister who cannot be having any relevant evidence to give is not a sufficient ground for refusal to summon him⁶. Nor can the Magistrate take upon himself the responsibility of selecting the witnesses for the defence⁷. His duty is to issue process for the attendance of all the witnesses named by the accused unless the application for process is vitiated for the reasons mentioned in the section. But where an unduly large number of witnesses are asked to be summoned, it is open to the Magistrate to conclude in the circumstances of a case, that the application for process is made for purposes of delay⁸. But where in spite of the largeness of the number of witnesses asked to be summoned the Magistrate does not think that the application for process is made for the purpose of delay or vexation he has no option but to accede to the prayer for process⁹. Nor can he, in such a case, arbitrarily restrict the number of witnesses to be summoned¹⁰.

in having acquitted the accused on ground of the absence of the statement of the principal witness for the defence but he should have pronounced judgment upon the evidence on the record)

Under this section what is the decisive ground for refusing an accused's application to call witnesses is not the fact that the case would be delayed but that a witness is *called for that purpose*¹¹.

This section does not control the provisions of S 94. Therefore even before the case has reached the stage indicated by this section it is open to the Magistrate to summon the production of a document at the instance of the accused if the conditions laid down in S 94 are satisfied⁴. See S 94, Note 2.

Under S 139 of the Evidence Act a person merely summoned to produce a document does not become a witness and cannot be cross examined unless and until he is called as a witness⁵.

6 Right of accused to cross examine prosecution witnesses — It has been seen in the Notes on S 256 that an accused in warrant cases has three opportunities to cross examine prosecution witnesses (a) before the charge is framed (b) after the charge is framed and before the accused is called upon to enter upon his defence and (c) under this section after the accused has entered upon his defence. Hence subject to the restrictions contained in this section an accused is entitled even after he has entered upon his defence to have re-summoned for cross examination any prosecution witness that he may name¹. The distinction between the right of the accused under this section and his right under S 256 is that while his right to recall and cross examine prosecution witnesses under S 256 is an absolute one his right under this section is subject to the discretion of the Magistrate². Where a prosecution witness is re-summoned under this section at the instance of the accused he does not thereby lose his character as a prosecution witness and can be cross examined by him³. Where there are two accused in a case and their cases are adverse to each other the witnesses called by one of the accused in his defence can be cross examined by the other accused⁴.

7. Proviso to sub-section (1) — The first paragraph of sub s (1) provides inter alia that the accused is entitled to the issue of process for compelling the attendance of prosecution witnesses for cross examination subject to the discretion of the Magistrate to refuse his application for process on the ground of its being made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The proviso enacts an exception to this rule. It embodies a prohibition to the effect that if the accused has already cross-examined or has had the opportunity of cross examining any witness after the charge was framed, the attendance of such witness should not be compelled except where it is necessary for the purposes of justice¹. But where the accused has not had a sufficient opportunity of cross examining a prosecution witness after the framing of the charge, his attendance may be compelled under this section².

The proviso restricts only the issue of process for compelling the attendance of witnesses. It does not restrict the cross examination of witnesses who are present in Court³. The Magistrate is not required by the proviso to record his reasons for not being satisfied that it is necessary for the ends of justice that the attendance of any witness should be compelled⁴.

7a. Examination of witness present in Court though not summoned —

This section does not apply to the examination of a witness who is present in Court though not summoned. Such a witness can be examined by the Court under S 510, but there is no obligation on the Court to examine him¹.

1 Legislative changes

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

The following explanation was added to S 270 of the Code of 1872

If a charge is drawn up the prisoner must either be acquitted or convicted. If no charge is drawn up there can be no judgment of acquittal or conviction except in the case provided for in Explanation 1 to Section 216

This gave legislative effect to the undermentioned decisions¹ under the Code of 1861.

Changes made in 1882 —

The explanation to S 270 of the Code of 1872 was omitted and the words 'if in any case' were introduced into the section

Changes made by Act 18 [XVIII] of 1923 —

The words 'where in any case under this Chapter the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of S 349 or S 562' were added in sub section (2)

2 "In which a charge has been framed" — In warrant cases an order of acquittal or conviction can be passed only after a charge has been framed¹. But the mere fact that a charge has not been framed does not invalidate the proceedings unless a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned thereby². See S 535. Moreover in warrant cases tried

7. "The offence may be lawfully compounded, or is not a cognizable offence." — As the section stood prior to the amendment of 1923, it applied only to cases where the offence charged was a compoundable one¹ The scope of the section has now been enlarged by the addition of the words "or is not a cognizable offence" after the words "the offence may be lawfully compounded" in the section. The section therefore applies not only to cases where the offence is a compoundable one but also where though it is not compoundable, it is non cognizable Where the offence is neither compoundable nor non cognizable, the section does not apply.² Where several offences are charged against the accused, it is necessary that all of them should be compoundable or non cognizable in order that the section may apply.³

For the meaning of "cognizable," see s 4 (1), cls (f) and (n)

8. "May in his discretion." — Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to discharge the accused on the absence of the complainant on the date of hearing¹ It only confers a discretion on the Magistrate to discharge the accused in the circumstances specified in it² and Magistrate should exercise such discretion only sparingly and discharge the accused³ Where the presence of the complainant is not at all necessary for proceeding with the case, the Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused merely because of his absence⁴ The Magistrate is bound to consider whether there is a prima facie case against the accused and where there is no prima facie case he will be justified in discharging the accused if the complainant absents himself on the date of hearing. But at the same time it must be remembered that the primary reason for a discharge under this section is the absence of the complainant which raises a presumption of his wish not to proceed with the case. Hence where despite the absence of the complainant the circumstances are such as do not give rise to the inference that he did not wish to proceed with the case the Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused under this section⁵. Thus where the absence of the complainant is due to a reasonable cause the Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused under this section⁶.

9 "At any time before the charge is framed"—This section only applies to cases where the complainant is absent on a day fixed for the hearing before the charge is framed. If the complainant absents himself after the charge is framed the Magistrate has no power to discharge the accused on the ground of the absence of the complainant¹. Nor can the accused be acquitted under s 259 in such a case as an order of acquittal under that section can only be based on a finding of 'not guilty' (see notes on s 258). The only course open to the Magistrate in such circumstances is to proceed with the case in the absence of the complainant² unless he decides to adjourn the case³.

10. Discharge the accused — The procedure laid down in this section is to discharge the accused. The section does not provide for an acquittal of the accused in the

1 Legislative changes

Difference between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861. The corresponding sections in the Code of 1872 were ss 322, 323 and 324

Changes made in 1882—

- (1) The offence referred to in clause (c) of the present section was added to the list of offences triable summarily under the section
- (2) The proviso to sub (1) of the present section was added giving legislative effect to the unenacted decision¹

- (3) The words 'and on conviction of the offender, may pass such sentence as may be lawfully inflicted under s 20 (corresponding to s 32 of the present Code) of this Code' which occurred in s 222 of the prior Code were omitted and the second paragraph of s 262 providing that in summary trials no sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months can be passed was added

Changes made in 1898 —

The following additions were made

- (1) The words 'if he or they think fit'
- (2) Clause (c)
- (3) Clause (m) This gave legislative effect to the undermentioned decision² and rendered obsolete decision noted below³
- (4) The words and figures and offences under ss 451 456 and 457 of the same Code in clause (i)
- (5) Sub section (2)

Changes made after 1898 —

By the amending Act I of 1903 the offences under ss 453 and 454 of the Penal Code were added to the offences enumerated in clause (i) of sub s (1) thus rendering obsolete the undermentioned decision⁴

2 Scope and object of the section. — This section and the next lay down the offences that can be tried summarily and the Magistrates by whom they can be so tried. While this section lays down the offences that can be tried in a summary way by District Magistrates Magistrates of the first class and Benches of Magistrates with first class powers the next section lays down the offences that can be tried summarily by Benches of Magistrates with second or third class powers. The procedure to be followed in summary trials is laid down in ss 262 to 265.

Under s 262 sub s (2) it is provided that in case of conviction in summary trials the Magistrate cannot pass any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months. Under s 411 a person convicted at a summary trial by a Magistrate empowered to try cases summarily has no right of appeal in any case where the sentence is one of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only.

These sections apply to trials before Magistrates and Benches of Magistrates other than Presidency Magistrates. As regards summary procedure in trials before the latter, see s 262 sub s. (4) s 370 and s. 411.

The object of this section and the sections following it in this chapter is to shorten the record and the work of the Magistrate in making the record. It is not intended to deprive the accused person of any of the rights under Chapter XX or Chapter XXI.¹

3 Magistrates empowered to try cases summarily — The power to try cases summarily is confined to the Magistrates and Benches of Magistrates mentioned in this section and the next section. While the offences mentioned in this section can be tried by District Magistrates Magistrates of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government and Benches of Magistrates with first class powers specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government the offences mentioned in s 261 can be tried by Benches of Magistrates with second or third class powers specially empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government.

4. "May, if he or they think fit." — Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to adopt the summary procedure in the case of the offences mentioned in it. The section only confers a discretion to try such offences in a summary way if the Magistrate thinks fit to do so. In each case he ought to consider whether the summary procedure would be appropriate to the case. As a rule, such procedure should be confined to cases of a simple nature where not much evidence is needed.¹ The procedure is inappropriate to cases of a complicated or serious nature.² Thus, it would not be proper to try in a summary way cases which are hotly contested,³ cases involving intricate questions of title and possession⁴ and cases necessitating the taking of lengthy evidence⁵ or requiring a local inquiry to be made.⁶ Similarly, the summary procedure is inappropriate in warrant cases in which the prosecution includes evidence given on commission in other presidencies, as the evidence so recorded militates in its very nature against the object of a trial by summary procedure.⁷ Where owing to the bulk of evidence or the complication of the matters or owing to the difficult nature of the points at issue, it is not possible for the Magistrate to keep in his mind, without taking exhaustive notes, the evidence of important facts, then, even though the offence may be technical and be punishable only with a light sentence, the Magistrate will not be acting properly if he applies the summary procedure.⁸ Similarly, serious cases, where a heavy sentence would be deserved in case of conviction,

Under S 262 sub s (2) it is provided that in case of conviction in summary trials the Magistrate cannot pass any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months. Under S 414 a person convicted at a summary trial by a Magistrate empowered to try cases summarily has no right of appeal in any case where the sentence is one of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only.

cannot appropriately be tried summarily.⁹ So also, cases where the result of the trial would have further consequences of a serious nature ought not to be tried in a summary way.¹⁰ For instance cases against public servants in which the whole career of the accused would depend on the result of the trial should not be tried summarily.¹¹ Similarly, where the owner of a flour mill is prosecuted for public nuisance for starting the mill in a residential locality, he should not be tried summarily if the result of the trial would have the effect, in case of conviction of compelling him to permanently close down his business.¹²

But the mere fact that there are a number of accused persons is not a conclusive reason against trying a case summarily.¹³

A summary trial is undesirable when a Magistrate takes cognizance of a case upon his own knowledge as in such a case he is himself in the position of a prosecutor and it would not be proper for him to deal with the case in a summary way in such case.¹⁴

Where the accused is deaf and dumb it has been held that the summary mode of trial is not suitable.¹⁵

Whether the procedure actually adopted is summary or ordinary is to be seen from the record. Thus where the evidence of all the witnesses is recorded in full together with their cross examination and an exhaustive judgment is delivered it may be said that the case was not tried summarily as a reference to Ss 263 and 264 will show that such a detailed record is not necessary.¹⁶ that the inquiry made by a Magistrate under the first part of S 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act 19 (XIII) of 1859 (repealed afterwards) was not a trial for an offence and such inquiry could not be held in a summary manner.¹⁷ A contrary view however was held by the Allahabad High Court.¹⁸

The section applies only to cases where the charge is exclusively for any of the offences mentioned in the section. Hence, where the accused in case of conviction would be liable to an enhanced punishment under S 75 of the Penal Code by reason of a previous conviction and such conviction is set out in the charge as provided for in S 291, the accused cannot be tried summarily although the trial may be for an offence mentioned in the section.¹⁹

The High Court as a superior Court of Record has a special jurisdiction to punish summarily contempt of its authority, and this jurisdiction is independent of and unaffected by the provisions of the Code.²⁰

Under S 67 of the Forest Act of 1907 it is provided that the Magistrates of the classes mentioned therein can try summarily offences of the kind specified in the section.²¹

6 Sub section (2)—This sub section provides for the procedure to be followed in cases in which in the course of a summary trial the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the case ought not to be tried in a summary way. The Code does not contain any express provision for the procedure to be followed in cases in which in the course of a regular trial the Magistrate finds that the case may be tried summarily. The question arises whether in such circumstances the Magistrate is at liberty to change his procedure to that of a summary trial. As to this see Section 261 Note 4.

1 Legislative changes — The following amendments were made in the section 1 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 1923 (18 [XIII] of 1923) s 75 —

(1) For the word and figures 417 appearing at the end of cl (a) the word and figures 447 and 501 were substituted

(2) The words with or without fine were added after the words one month in clause (b)

2 Offences triable summarily — A Bench of Magistrates with second or third class powers cannot try summarily any offences except those mentioned in this section¹

3 Conservancy clauses of Police Acts — It has been held by the Madras High Court that s 48 of the General Police Act 21 [XIV] of 1859 (corresponding to s 34 of the General Police Act 5 [V] of 1861) which relates to obstructions and nuisances in roads within the limits of towns is a conservancy clause within the meaning of this section¹

4 Municipal Acts. — The Bengal Food Adulteration Act (6 [VI] of 1919) is not a Municipal Act within the meaning of cl (b) of this section¹

262.* (1) In trials under this Chapter, the procedure prescribed for summons cases shall be followed in summons-cases, and the procedure prescribed for warrant-cases shall be followed in warrant cases, except as hereinafter mentioned.

(2) No sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months shall be passed in the case of any conviction under this Chapter.

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. The corresponding section in the Code of 1872 was S. 226

Changes made in 1882 —

The second paragraph was added. At the same time the provision in S 222 of the prior Code authorizing the infliction in summary trials of any sentence that might be lawfully passed under S. 20 of the Code (corresponding to S 32 of the present Code) was omitted

2. Procedure to be followed in summary trials. — This section and the following three sections provide for the procedure to be followed in summary trials. Offences that can be tried summarily comprise both summons cases and warrant cases. This section provides that in the summary trial of summons cases the procedure to be followed is that of summons cases and in the summary trial of warrant-cases the procedure to be followed is that of warrant cases, except as otherwise provided in the chapter. In other words, the procedure to be followed in summary trials is the same as that provided for ordinary trials except as otherwise prescribed. Such exceptions are provided in subs (2) of this section and in Ss 263 and 264. It has been held that a breach of the provisions of this section is not a mere irregularity but illegality.¹

Where there is no provision for the departure from the ordinary procedure, such procedure should be followed in summary trials as strictly as in ordinary trials. Thus, proceedings in summary trials as in ordinary trials should commence with the issue of a summons or warrant for the appearance of the accused.² Similarly, the following provisions apply to summary trials equally with ordinary trials. S. 191,³ S 213,⁴ S 257,⁵ S 312⁶ and section 250⁷

As to the applicability of S. 256 to warrant cases, see S 256, Note 2.

Even in cases where a departure from the ordinary procedure is provided for, Magistrate should be careful not to exceed the limits up to which such departure is allowed and they should follow strictly any special procedure that may be provided for summary trials in such cases. Thus S 263 dispenses with the recording of evidence and the drawing up of a formal charge but requires the Magistrate to draw up a statement giving the particulars mentioned in the section. Magistrates should be careful to prepare this statement as required by the section.⁵ Similarly in appealable cases it is provided that a judgment containing the particulars mentioned in S 264 should be drawn up. An omission to comply with this requirement will be an irregularity in the trial.⁶

3 Sentence that can be passed in summary trials—Sub section (2) —

This sub-section prohibits the infliction in summary trials of a sentence of imprisonment for any term exceeding three months.¹ The object of the section is to restrict the passing of sentences of imprisonment of considerable length in a summary trial from a conviction in which the right of appeal is greatly restricted.²

Where an accused is convicted of a number of offences in a summary trial a separate sentence must be passed in respect of each offence³ (as in any other mode of trial). But it has been held that where in such a case the accused is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of three months in respect of each offence the sentences must be ordered to run concurrently and not consecutively, as otherwise the object of the section will be defeated.⁴

Where a case is tried summarily and referred to a superior Magistrate under S 349, the mere fact of such a reference being made does not make the trial other than a summary one and the Magistrate to whom the case is referred, if he does not try the case anew in any way as he is authorized to do under S 349 cannot pass any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding the three months period mentioned in this section.⁵

But the prohibition applies only to substantive sentences of imprisonment.⁶ Hence, where imprisonment is ordered in default of the payment of fine the term for which such imprisonment is ordered may exceed the limits imposed by this section.⁷ So also this section will not render illegal a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine merely by reason of the fact that the aggregate of the terms of substantive sentence of imprisonment and of the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine exceeds three months or by reason of the Magistrate having passed a substantive sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term allowed by the section.⁸ Similarly the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to order security for keeping the peace in cases coming under S 106 is not affected by this section⁹ and where such security is ordered the power to commit to prison in default of furnishing the security under S 193 is again unaffected by this section¹⁰

The section only restricts the term for which a sentence of imprisonment can be passed it does not set any limits to the amount of fine that can be imposed on the convicted person¹¹ Nor is the power of the Magistrate to sentence the convicted person to solitary confinement under S 73 of the Penal Code in any way affected by the section¹²

1 Legislative changes — The words "nor the reasons for passing the judgment" occurring in the Code of 1872 after the words "need not record the evidence of the witnesses" have been omitted in the subsequent Codes.

The following words were for the first time introduced in the Code of 1882 —

(a) and in cases coming under clause (d) clause (e) or clause (f) of S 260, has been committed in clause (f)

(b) and his examination if any in clause (g),

Code of 1898 —

The words "or clause (g) of sub section (1)" were added

2. Scope and applicability of the section — It has been seen under S 262 that the procedure to be followed in summary trials is the same as that in ordinary trials except as otherwise provided. This section provides for some of the matters in respect of which the ordinary procedure may be departed from in summary trials. It provides that in such trials the evidence of witnesses need not be recorded and that no formal charge is necessary, but that the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates as the case may be should enter in the prescribed form the particulars mentioned in the section. But the form prescribed under the section will not be the only record of the case for all purposes¹

The section applies only to cases in which no appeal lies². The procedure applicable to cases in which an appeal lies is provided for in S 264.

That section provides that in appealable cases in summary trials a judgment should be prepared containing the particulars mentioned in this section and the substance of the evidence and that such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming under that section. The question has arisen whether the exemption from recording the evidence of witnesses for which express provision is made in this section applies in cases coming under S 264 also. As to this see Notes on Section 264.

It has been seen in the Notes under S 262 that, except in regard to matters for which a different procedure is prescribed or permitted for summary trials, it is the duty of the Magistrate in such trials to follow the rules of ordinary procedure as strictly as in ordinary trials. Thus though this section dispenses with the recording of evidence it does not dispense with the hearing of evidence and a finding in a summary trial which is based on a refusal or failure to hear evidence is as much liable to be upset as a finding in an ordinary trial which is based on a similar ground³.

This section and the other sections in this chapter refer only to the summary procedure in trials before Magistrates and Benches of Magistrates other than Presidency Magistrates. As to summary procedure in trials before Presidency Magistrates, see S 362, sub s (4) Section 370 and Section 441.

There being so little to be recorded under this section and consequently there being so little protection from without to the accused against the risk of error, haste or inaccuracy the scanty provisions of this section must be strictly complied with and the record must be sufficiently exact and full to enable the revisional Court to say whether the law has been complied with or not on the points to be recorded⁴

See also Notes on Section 262.

3 "The Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates need not record the evidence of the witnesses" — This section exempts the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates holding a summary trial from recording the evidence of witnesses as in ordinary trials¹ The contrary view² is against the express provisions of this section and S 354 and cannot be supported

Although the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates trying a case summarily is not bound to record the evidence of witnesses such recording of evidence is not prohibited and in cases of importance, it has been held that Magistrates would do well to record the evidence³ The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that evidence so recorded will not form part of the record⁴

Moreover, Magistrates in such cases may take notes of the evidence for their own information and use and it has been laid down that where a case is likely to be adjourned to a long date the Magistrate ought to take such notes⁵ The question arises as to whether such notes of evidence, where they are taken form part of the record or are the private property of the Magistrate which he can destroy at his option On this question there is a conflict of decisions On the one hand it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad⁶

Bombay⁷ and Rangoon,⁸ the Chief Court of Oudh⁹ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind,¹⁰ that such notes do not form part of the record and can be destroyed by the Magistrate at his option. But on the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta¹¹ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur¹² that such notes form part of the record and cannot be destroyed by the Magistrate. In the undermentioned case¹³ it has been held that the failure of the Magistrate to sign the memorandum of evidence, assuming that the Magistrate is bound to make such memorandum, is not by itself sufficient to vitiate the trial and conviction. See also the undermentioned cases¹⁴.

This section applies only to cases where no appeal lies. As to the question whether in cases in which an appeal lies the Magistrate is bound to record the evidence as in ordinary trials, see Notes on section 261.

4 "He or they shall enter . . . particulars" — This section requires the Court in a summary trial to prepare a record in the form that may be prescribed by the Provincial Government containing the various particulars mentioned in clauses (a) to (j) of the section. By implication this dispenses with the recording of a judgment in the form laid down by s 367.¹ But the record prescribed by this section must be prepared scrupulously and carefully and must be complete in all the particulars specified in the section.² The particulars must be recorded in separate columns, lumping together in the same column all the particulars is not proper.³ The record must be prepared at the time of the trial, its preparation after the close of the trial is not sufficient.⁴ Further, the record must be prepared by the presiding officer of the Court itself. Except in cases where he is authorized to use the services of an officer appointed for the purpose under s 265, sub s (2), he cannot depute a clerk to prepare the record.⁵

But the failure of the Magistrate to prepare the record as required by this section will not by itself justify the quashing of the conviction unless it has caused prejudice or occasioned failure of justice. Thus, where a Magistrate failed to enter the date of the commission of the offence it was held that the conviction could not be set aside unless it was

Where the offence complained of is an offence of theft or other offence falling under clauses (d) to (g) of sub s (1) of S 260 the value of the property in respect of which the offence was committed must also be specified in the record in order to make it clear that the offence was one which could be tried in a summary way⁶ But the mere failure to do so is not sufficient to raise any question of possible or probable prejudice or failure of justice so as to warrant the setting aside of the conviction unless it is shown that there was a real defect of jurisdiction by reason of the property exceeding Rs 50 in value⁹ of the Court⁵. Merely saying 'I believe the prosecution is not enough as this is only a conclusion and not a reason'⁶. Where the reasons for conviction are not properly recorded with the result that when the matter goes before a Court of revision the latter feels a doubt as to the guilt of the accused the benefit of the doubt must go to the accused⁷. But where, despite the defectiveness of the record in this particular the Court of revision is satisfied from the other material on the record that the conviction was right it will not be upset merely because of the non-compliance with this section, such non-compliance being merely an irregularity within S. 578⁸.

Section 441 provides that when the record of the proceeding of any Presidency Magistrate is called for by the High Court under S. 435 he may submit a written statement of the grounds of his decision and that the High Court should consider such statement before upsetting his decision. There is no such provision in the case of other Magistrates and so, when the reasons for conviction are not recorded as required by this section and the matter goes up before a Court of revision the lower Court cannot send any written statement of reasons for its decision for the consideration of the Court of revision⁹.

264.* (1) In every case tried summarily by a Magistrate or Bench Record in appealable cases in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate or Bench shall, before passing sentence, record judgment embodying the substance of the evidence and also the particulars mentioned in section 263.

(2) Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section.

1. "Judgment embodying the substance of the evidence."—The language of the section is imperative. In a case coming within the section, the judgment ought to embody the substance of the evidence adduced on both sides.¹ The substance of every separate deposition need not be recorded, but only the substance of the evidence as a whole need be given.² But, it is not sufficient compliance with the law to state that "the witnesses for the prosecution support the statement of the complainant" and "the statement of the witnesses examined by the accused is very conflicting."³ Further, it must be remembered that the substance of the evidence is a matter quite distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence. Hence, a mere statement of the facts which the evidence of certain witnesses is considered to have proved is not sufficient.⁴ The substance must be stated plainly and must not be left to be deduced by inference.⁵ The substance of the evidence should be so recorded as to enable the appellate Court to judge if there are sufficient materials for the decision.⁶

The failure to set forth the substance of the evidence is fatal to the case⁷ because it precludes the appeal in that it prevents the proper disposal of the appeal that has to be made.⁸

The word 'substance' does not make it clear that the Magistrate need not record the substance of the evidence in the case of acquittal.⁹

2 Sub section (2)—“Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section”—Section 263 expressly provides that in cases coming under that section it is not necessary to record the evidence of witnesses or frame a formal charge. There is no such express provision in this section. But the effect of the provision in sub s (2) that the judgment prepared in accordance with sub s (1) should be the only record in the case is to be juxtaposed with the recording of the evidence of witnesses¹ and the framing of a formal charge² even in cases coming under this section. Even if the evidence of witnesses is actually recorded or the Court takes rough notes of the evidence such evidence or notes cannot form part of the record in view of the express provision of sub s (2),³ and the appellate Court cannot travel beyond the judgment to any other material in order to test the substance of the evidence forming part of the judgment.⁴ But sub s (2) does required by the section? As to what "or each" in falling in line of signing the full name amounts to an irregularity or a technical irregularity within the meaning of S. 57 see Notes on S. 57. The signature should be made with a pen and not with a stamp.²

Section 267 provides that a judgment should be signed by the presiding officer of the Court. When a case is tried summarily by a Bench of Magistrates it is provided by S. 141 of the section that the judgment or record prepared by a member of the Bench should be signed by every member of the Bench. When the judgment or record is prepared by the Chairman of the Bench, will the signature of the Chairman alone be sufficient as that of the presiding officer under S. 27 or is it necessary that the record or judgment should be signed by each of the other members of the Bench also? On this question it has been held by the High Court of Madras that the words "the presiding officer of the Court" in S. 27 are no more than a comprehensive description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgment; that they do not afford any assistance in the construction of this section and that the intention of this section is that by whoever the record or judgment is written it should be signed by all the members present. Hence the fact that the record or judgment has been written and signed by the Chairman of a Bench does not dispense with the signatures of the other members of the Bench.³ See also Notes on S. 27.

Where copies are furnished to the parties of the judgment or record the copy should contain a copy of the signature of all the members of the Bench who signed the original. A copy, where it is given the signature of only the Chairman of the Bench is incorrect and defective.⁴

* Substituted by A O for Local Government

1 Legislative changes — Sub sections (3) and (4) were newly added in the Code of 1898

2 'Shall be written by the presiding officer'—This section provides that the record or the judgment in summary trials should be written by the presiding officer. The preparation of such record is thus the duty of the Magistrate himself and he cannot depute a clerk to do it¹. But in cases falling under sub s (2) the record or judgment may be prepared by the officer appointed for the purpose under it and the members of the Bench trying the case may sign the record or judgment so prepared. Where a case is tried by a Bench of Magistrates it has been held that the record or judgment ought to be prepared in the presence of all the Magistrates forming the Bench and they must all be aware of their contents and approve of them even though the formal pronouncement of the same may be left to be made by the Chairman of the Bench in their absence. Therefore a record or judgment prepared by the Chairman in the absence of the other Magistrates is not valid in law even though the others may have concurred in the *decision*².

3 Signature on judgment or record — The requirements of public policy necessitate the writing of the full name of the Magistrate who signs the judgment and the mere putting in of the initials is not a sufficient compliance with the law. Therefore where one of the three members of a Bench trying a case summarily merely initials the judgment instead of signing his full name in it he cannot be held to have signed the judgment as

Section 367 provides that a judgment should be signed by the presiding officer of the Court. Where a case is tried summarily by a Bench of Magistrates, it is provided by sub s (3) of this section that the judgment or record prepared by a member of the Bench should be signed by every member of the Bench. Where the judgment or record is prepared by the Chairman of the Bench, will the signature of the Chairman alone be sufficient as that of the presiding officer under S 367 or is it necessary that the record or judgment should be signed by each of the other members of the Bench also? On this question it has been held by the High Court of Madras that the words 'the presiding officer of the Court' in S 367 are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgments; that they do not afford any assistance in the construction of this section and that the intention of this section is that by whomsoever the record or judgment is written it should be signed by all the members present. Hence, the fact that the record or judgment has been written and signed by the Chairman of a Bench does not dispense with the signatures of the other members of the Bench.³ See also Note 3 on S 367.

1. Legislative changes (Omitted)

2 Scope and applicability of the section — This chapter deals with the procedure to be adopted by a Court of Session or a High Court in the trial of cases committed to it under chap XVIII of the Code. The language of ss 193 and 191 implies that this chapter has reference only to cases committed to a Court of Session. It would appear therefore that the procedure laid down in this chapter was not intended to be applicable to the trial of such exceptional cases as a Court of Session or a High Court may take cognizance of, otherwise than on commitment as provided for in ss 193 and 191.

The material distinction between a trial held by a Magistrate and a trial under this chapter is that while in the former the right and duty to decide a case rests solely in the Magistrate in trials under this chapter the Judge is bound by the verdict of a jury or to consider the opinion of assessors as the case may be.

3 "High Court" — The expression 'High Court' is defined in S 4 (i) (j) of the Code. But that definition is subject to the provision in S 266 giving the expression a different meaning for certain purposes.

A High Court exercising original criminal jurisdiction is not a Sessions Court within the meaning of the Code¹

4 Judicial Commissioner — The effect of the definition of 'High Court' in this section is not to confer the status of a High Court on Courts which are not statutory High Courts but is only to extend to such Courts the procedure applicable to statutory High Courts in the trial of sessions cases. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind for example is in its constitution a Sessions Court under S 1A of the Sind Courts Act 12 [XII] of 1866. But in the trial of sessions cases it is deemed to be a High Court to the extent prescribed in this section¹. As such when a Judicial Commissioner of that Court in a sessions trial disagrees with the verdict of the jury the procedure to be adopted is that of a High Court as provided in S 305 of this chapter and the Judge has no power of reference under S 307². The Court of a Judicial Commissioner as for example of Sind, is a High Court only for the purposes of Chap XXIII (and of Chap XVIII) and remains a Sessions Court for other purposes notwithstanding S 266 and an appeal lies under S 418 of the Code from the decision of a Judge of that Court in a sessions trial³. Under Bombay Act 7 [VII] of 1926, which came into force from the 15th April of 1940⁴ the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has become the Chief Court of Sind. The Sind Courts Act, 12 [XII] of 1866 has been repealed by the above Act but under S 8 thereof the Chief Court of Sind continues to be a Court of Session. So the above principles will apply also in the case of the Chief Court of Sind⁵.

267.* All trials under this Chapter before a High Court shall be by jury, and, notwithstanding anything herein contained, in all criminal cases transferred to a High Court under this Code or under the Letters Patent of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, [or the Government of India Act, 1915,] [or the Government of India Act, 1935,] the trial may, if the High Court so directs, be by jury

a These words were inserted by the amending Act 13 [VIII] of 1910

b The e word were inserted by A O

1 Trial by jury — The word jury means a company of men sworn to deliver a verdict upon evidence delivered to them touching the issue¹. The system of trial by jury in England is based on the common law and on the constitutional principle that every person is entitled to demand that he be not restrained of his liberty except per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terra so that trial by jury is the rule except in particular cases. In this country there is no such inalienable right to be tried by jury². It is only a creation of statute³ and is simply a mode of trial prescribed by the Legislature in certain cases⁴. The verdict of the jury in India has therefore not got the same sacrosanct character as it has in England and repugnancy in the verdict is not in itself sufficient to justify the quashing of a conviction based on such verdict⁵.

2 Criminal cases transferred to the High Court under this Code — Where a criminal case is transferred to the High Court and there is no order under the section that it should be tried by jury the trial will be by assessors if that is the mode of trial prescribed in the Court from which the case is transferred

See Sections 419 and 596

3 Transfer under Letters Patent — See clause 29 of the Letters Patent (Madras, Bombay and Calcutta) and the corresponding clause of the Letters Patent for the other High Courts

268.† All trials before a Court of Session shall be either by jury, or with the aid of assessors

As to the effect of a jury trying a case triable with the aid of assessors and vice versa, see Section 536 and Note 3 on Section 269

See also the undermentioned case²

2 "With the aid of assessors" — In cases triable with the aid of assessors it is mandatory that the trial should commence with the requisite number of competent assessors under S 281 but where in the course of the trial some of them are unable to attend, the trial may proceed with the aid of the other assessors see S 285

The jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to commence his trial and his jurisdiction to continue the trial are dependent upon his choosing the requisite number of competent assessors to aid him and on the continuation of at least one of them throughout the trial. Any finding or sentence passed by a Sessions Judge in contravention of these requisites will not be one passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction¹. The defect is not one which can be cured by Section 537²

The scheme of the Code shows that in the view of the Legislature it is less advantageous to an accused to be tried with the aid of assessors than by a jury³

3 Position of the jury and of the assessors — The jury form a tribunal or body with a foreman and their verdict is the verdict of the body, or where there is no unanimity, of the majority (S 301). In cases tried by jury, the jury is the real tribunal but is aided by the Judge and in certain matters directed by the Judge¹. They are invested with a special status and given special powers and the ultimate responsibility for all decisions within their sphere is meant to be theirs and theirs alone.²

The assessors on the other hand do not form a body, but each acts and expresses his opinion individually. They are only to assist the Judge and take no part in the judgment. The Judge is the sole judge of law and fact and the responsibility for the decision rests only with him.³ Thus an assessor does not form an essential part of the Sessions Court.⁴

As a juror stands on a higher footing, speaks with greater authority and takes a larger share in the decision of a criminal case than does an assessor, it may be taken as axiomatic that in the absence of a specific prohibition an objection that could not be upheld regarding a juror would be ruled out in the case of an assessor.⁵

In trials by jury the Judge is bound to sum up the whole case to the jury and record their verdict (S 297), while in trials with the aid of assessors, the Judge may sum up the case and should record their opinion (S 309).⁶

An appeal in a case tried by jury will lie on a matter of law only, while an appeal in a case tried with the aid of assessors will lie on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law (S 418).

4 Recording evidence in the absence of jurors or assessors — A Court of Session is authorized to record evidence in the absence of the jury or assessors only when additional evidence is called for by the appellate Court under S 428 sub s (3) or by the High Court under Section 375, sub s (2). Hence, a Court has no jurisdiction to record material evidence after the discharge of the assessors.¹ This view has been supported on the ground that the assessors form part of the Court.² But this does not seem to be correct in view of the fact that the decision in cases tried with the aid of assessors is solely that of the Judge and the assessors merely assist the Judge with their opinions. See Note 2 above.

1. Legislative changes—There is no material difference between S 322 of the Code of 1861 and S 233 of the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

A new paragraph was added in S 269 of the Code of 1882 to the effect that where the accused was charged with several offences some of which were and some were not triable by jury, he should be tried by jury for all such offences¹

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

- (1) Sub section (2) of the present section is new
- (2) The words 'he shall be tried jury' in sub s (3) have been substituted for the words 'he shall be tried by jury for all such offences' which occurred in the old Code

Changes made in the Code of 1898 —

- (1) The words "with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council" occurring after the words "Local Government may" in sub s (1) were repealed by the Devolution Act, 38 [XXXVIII] of 1920
- (2) The words 'with the like sanction' occurring between the words "may" and "revoke" in sub s (1) were repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act, 10 [X] of 1927

2. Scope of the section.—This section empowers the Provincial Government to direct by order in the Official Gazette that the trial of all offences or of any particular

Section 269 — Note 1

1. See (86) 9 Mad 42 (43) Queen Empress v Lekshmana class of offences before any Court of Session shall be by jury. As has been seen in the Notes on S 267 there is no such inalienable right to be tried by jury as exists under the common law of England. This section, therefore, limiting the right of trial by jury to the cases notified by the Provincial Government under this section and impliedly negating such a right in other criminal cases is infra vires of the Indian Legislature and does not offend against S 22 of the Indian Councils Act 1901¹.

The power of the Provincial Government under this section is not limited to merely adding a jury to the Court of Session. The plain wording of the section implies that the offences must be triable before the Court of Session and does not derogate from the power otherwise given to the Provincial Government to prescribe which offences should not come before the Court of Session. Thus, the section cannot be interpreted in such a way as to invest the Provincial Government with the power to direct that all or any class of offences not punishable with death shall be tried by jury before the Sessions Court, and not by Magistrates invested with power under S 30².

See also the undermentioned case³.

3 "Trial of . . . shall be by jury in any district." — Where any district in a division in which the Provincial Government has directed that the trial of certain offences shall be by jury, ceases to belong to such division, the right of trial by jury for such offences also ceases in that district¹.

The words "trial of . . . in any district" mean that the trial shall be by jury in any district when so ordered by a notification and not that the trial shall be by jury of offences committed in any district. There is not only no prohibition against the trial being otherwise than by jury in a district not affected by a notification under this section,² but in view of S 268, a trial in a Court of Session must in the absence of a notification under this section, be with the aid of assessors³. But a trial by jury in a case which is triable by the Judge with the aid of assessors is not invalid merely on that ground. Nor is a trial with assessors in a case triable by jury invalid unless objection is taken for such trial before the Court records its finding. See Section 536.

When a person is charged with an offence triable by the Judge with the aid of assessors and is tried accordingly but the assessors express the opinion that he is not guilty of the offence charged but guilty in respect of a minor offence with which he was not charged, a conviction on the opinion of the assessors for such minor offence is not invalid, even though such minor offence is triable by jury⁴.

Conversely, where an accused is charged with an offence triable by a jury and is accordingly tried by a jury, the latter has power under S 238 to find the accused guilty of a minor offence not included in the charge though such offence is not triable by a jury but is triable with the aid of assessors⁵

Where an offence which is not triable by a jury is tried by a jury as a matter of fact, the trial does not become other than one by a jury for purposes of appeal and an appeal is competent under S 418, only on a matter of law⁶. In such a case, it is not also open to the Judge to treat the verdict of the jury as the opinion of the assessors.⁷ See also Section 306, Note 3

The powers of transfer conferred on the High Court under S 520 are not in any way limited or controlled by this section. Hence, the trial of an offence which would in the ordinary course be by jury in a particular district, may be transferred to another district where it would be held with the aid of assessors only.⁸

4. Trial for substantive offence read with section 149 of the Penal Code—Where the offence under S 325 of the Penal Code was triable by jury, but all offences of rioting were excluded from jury trial and a person was charged under Ss 325 and 149 by reason of his being a member of an unlawful assembly, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that the essential part of the offence was rioting and not the offence under S 325 and that, therefore, the offence charged should be tried by the Judge with the aid of assessors¹. On the other hand the High Court of Patna has held that in all cases in which an accused is charged with an offence triable by jury read with S 149 of the Penal Code, the Court must always first determine whether the particular offence has been committed by an individual and next whether S 149 makes the accused responsible as a participator, and that therefore if the particular offence is triable by jury, such offence read with S 149 must also be triable by jury². It is submitted that the latter view is correct.

5. "Or of any particular class of offences."—The words "class of offences" are not restricted to any classification recognized by the Legislature such as is found in the Penal Code (e g, offences against the State or against the person), or in the Criminal Procedure Code (e g, bailable offences, cognizable offences). It may include a classification according to the persons who commit the offences or in regard to the particular occasion in connection with which they were committed. Therefore, a notification with drawing an order for trial by jury previously notified in respect of certain offenders whose case is pending before a Court is not incompetent³.

7 Charge for offences, some triable by jury and others with assessors

—Sub section (3) — There was no provision corresponding to this sub section in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 but as a matter of practice a procedure similar to that contemplated by this sub section was followed where at the same trial an accused was charged with offences some of which were triable by jury and others by the Judge with the aid of assessors¹ In the code of 1882 it was however enacted that, in such cases the accused should be tried for all the offences only by jury The present sub s. (3) directs that the jury should themselves act as assessors in respect of the offences triable with the aid of assessors² and has thus given effect to the view that had been held before the Code of 1882 But the system has often been found fault with as leading to unsatisfactory and anomalous results³

A joint trial for different offences some of which are and others are not triable by jury is not illegal⁴ In fact the procedure at the trial for both classes of offences (i.e., those triable by jury and those with assessors) is the same up to the point of summing up.⁵ Where the charge to the jury is combined with the summing up to the jurors as assessors, the Judge should clearly explain to the jurors the double capacity of jurors and assessors in which they are acting⁶ The Judge should take the verdict of the jury in respect of the offences triable by jury and the opinion of the jurors as assessors in respect of the other offences charged He should not take the verdict of the jury as jurors in respect of the latter offences⁷ In Maising Bechar v Emperor,⁸ Chandavarkar, J., observed as follows

"The law makes no distinction as to the procedure at the trial between a trial by a jury and one with the aid of assessors except as to the summing up in the case of the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinions of the assessors in the latter are respectively taken It is at this latter point that there is a departure of ways and if the accused who is tried does not intervene at that crucial point, and get the procedure applicable to trials with the aid of assessors enforced he cannot be heard to complain."

Where a verdict is given by the jury in respect of the offences triable by jury and an opinion is given by them as assessors in respect of the other offences the Judge should in respect of the verdict follow the procedure laid down in Ss 306 and 307, and in respect of the opinions, the procedure laid down in S 309⁹ Where the jury gave a verdict of not guilty in respect of the offences triable by jury and expressed a similar opinion as assessors in respect of the other offences charged, whereupon the Judge disagreeing with the opinion of the assessors convicted the accused in respect of the latter charges, and in the interests of justice made also a reference under S 307 in respect of the verdict, it was held that the procedure followed by the Judge was correct and that he was not bound to wait before convicting on the latter charges, till the reference to the High Court was answered¹⁰ Where the conviction for the offences triable by jury is set aside owing to certain defect in the verdict, it does not follow as a necessary consequence that the conviction for the other offences for which the accused has been tried with the aid of jurors as assessors must also be set aside¹¹

Where an accused is charged with a number of offences some of which are triable by a jury and some by the Judge with the aid of assessors, but the Judge fails to follow the procedure laid down in subs (3) and all the offences are tried by the jury, the irregularity in the procedure does not make the trial illegal or other than a trial by jury¹² Conversely, where an accused is charged with a number of offences which are all triable by jury but the Judge thinking that some of the offences are triable with the aid of assessors, follows the procedure laid down in this sub section and no objection is taken to such a procedure, the legality of the trial is saved by S 526 (2)¹³

The sub section only applies to cases where a person is charged with offences triable by a jury as well as those triable with the aid of assessors It does not apply to a case where the accused is only charged with an offence triable by a jury but subsequently it is found on the evidence that he has committed a different offence which is triable with the aid of assessors¹⁴ Nor does it apply to a case where none of the accused persons is charged with more than one offence Thus, where one of the accused is charged with murder, an offence triable by jury, and the other is charged with conspiracy to murder, an offence triable with the aid of assessors, the section does not apply and a joint trial of the two accused is bad¹⁵

1 Scope of the section — This section and the next contain all that is necessary as to pleading and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of jurisprudence Under this section the accused can plead guilty or claim to be tried or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried¹

2. "Commencement of proceedings" — As to when the trial before a High Court or Court of Session begins see S 4 (1) (k) Note 4 and the undermentioned case.¹

3 "The accused shall appear or be brought" — As a general rule a person should be relieved of his chains when brought before a Court for trial or as a witness There can be no question that the display of fetters must have a prejudicial effect against him in the eyes of jurors or assessors. The exception to this rule should be when the superintendent or the keeper of the jail certifies that the use of the chain is necessary to guard against violence or an attempt to escape. But the Judge cannot refuse to try an accused brought in fetters though he can direct the removal of the same¹

4 "And the charge shall be read out in Court and explained to him." — The actual charge sheet is an important document, and should be drawn up with care and caution so that the accused may have no doubt whatever as to the offences which he is called upon to answer. When a record is prepared for an appeal, it should be seen whether there is on the record a charge which has been read and explained to the accused and if it is absent the reason therefor should be ascertained¹. A mere reading out of the charge is not enough it should be explained to the accused² and the record should show that the charge has been read out and explained to the accused³. Where a deaf and dumb person was convicted of an offence upon a trial without an attempt to communicate with him respecting the charge against him, the conviction was set aside⁴. But where the accused is defended by a counsel and the charge is read out and the counsel does not object, the omission to explain is only an irregularity if it has not caused any prejudice to the accused, and is cured by s 537⁵.

Before reading out the charge, the Judge should scrutinize the charge as to whether it requires any amendment before the accused is called on to plead thereto⁶. Thus, where two sets of accused persons are committed by two different Magistrates to the same Court of Session on identical charges in respect of the same offences, the Judge can, in the exercise of his powers under s 226, reframe the charge and charge all the accused together to stand their trial jointly⁷. 5 "He shall be asked whether he is guilty." — The Court is bound to ask the accused whether he is guilty of the offence charged or claims to be tried. A conviction cannot be supported where the accused has not been asked whether he is guilty or claims to be tried¹

An accused person should not however, be encouraged to plead guilty in the hope of receiving a lenient punishment²

If, before the commencement of the proceedings, the Judge considers that there is no evidence to warrant a commitment, he should refer the case to the High Court for getting the commitment quashed under S 215³

An objection as to jurisdiction of the Court to try the case should be taken before the plea is taken and the jury sworn⁴

6 Alternative charges — An accused should never be called on to plead in the alternative but only separately as to each of the heads of a charge⁵

7. "If the accused pleads guilty" — In order to see whether the accused has pleaded guilty or not the whole and not merely a part of his statement should be considered¹ There are no pleadings in a Criminal Court and an accused person cannot be judged in a criminal case, by how he pleads or fails to plead in the proceeding²

A plea of guilty on which the Court can act must be a plea of guilty of the offence charged without any qualification. The Judge should see whether or not the man understood what the charge was in order to ascertain what he meant by his plea of guilty³ Thus where the accused instead of pleading guilty, in the words of the section makes a rambling statement more or less admitting guilt it would be much safer if the Judge records a plea of not guilty and proceeds to try the case in the ordinary way⁴ A plea of guilty can only be made in response to a charge made by the Court and an informal admission as to the guilt does not amount to a formal plea of guilty and such an admission has not the same binding effect as a plea of guilty⁵ The plea of guilty must distinctly admit each and every fact necessary to constitute the offence. Thus where the accused merely admits that he beat his wife and that she died but does not admit that he had any intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death it is not a sufficient plea of guilty to the charge of murder⁶ Similarly where an accused while admitting that he killed the deceased states that he was not in his right mind at the time⁷ or that he did it under grave and sudden provocation⁸ or that he was put to instant fear of death by the co-accused⁹ or that he did it while under epileptic fits¹⁰ or in a struggle arising from the fact of the deceased having first attacked him¹¹ he cannot be said to have pleaded guilty to the charge of murder Likewise where an accused while admitting having presented a false petition states that he did so under the influence of certain persons mentioned,¹² or unthinkingly without the intention to injure¹³ he cannot be said to have pleaded guilty to the charge of intentionally giving a false complaint Where the prisoner states that he is guilty but adds that he did not commit the offence with which he is charged, it does not amount to a plea of guilty¹⁴ A prisoner accused of dacoity admitted having accompanied the dacoits for a short distance but stated that he turned back immediately and had nothing to do with the dacoity it was held that it did not amount to a plea of guilty to the charge of dacoity¹⁵

Where a native Indian subject charged with the murder of another native Indian subject in a foreign territory admitted the causing of death but stated that he was not punishable for the act as the act was committed outside British India it was held that the plea was really one of not guilty¹⁶ After the accused has claimed to be tried any confessional statement made by him at the end of the trial is not a plea of guilty on which the Judge can convict him without taking the verdict of the jury¹⁷ The use of expressions like 'Your honour will please pardon the fault in future no such thing will happen' is not itself an incriminating statement¹⁸

A plea of guilty is not a confession such as is dealt with in the Evidence Act The plea is a statement which if accepted by the Court amounts to a waiver on the part of the accused of trial in which alone a confession might be utilised in evidence¹⁹

8. Partial plea of guilty. — Where in a charge of intentionally giving false evidence in two alternate statements, the accused pleads guilty as to one it does not by any means follow that a verdict of not guilty is to be recorded in the alternative matter of the charge. That ought to be tried in the ordinary way.¹ Where the prisoner pleads not guilty to the graver offence charged but guilty to the minor offence charged, the Court should proceed to try him for the graver offence. It is not competent to the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the charge after the accused had been arraigned and pleaded not guilty. The prisoner is entitled to a trial and a clear verdict of the jury.²

9 "Claims to be tried" — A plea of "not guilty" is not recognised by the Code. The accused can plead guilty under this section. He can claim to be tried or he can refuse to plead which amounts to the same thing as claiming to be tried. A plea of not guilty amounts to a claim to be tried.¹ Where an accused claims to be tried or makes a plea which amounts to such a plea the Court should regularly try the accused and cannot convict him on a confession before the committing Magistrate.² In such cases there should be a formal trial by the jury or with the aid of assessors.³ If the accused claiming to be tried, pleads that his act comes under any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code he must plead them specifically. In the absence of such a plea the absence of such circumstances will be presumed under S 105 of the Evidence Act.⁴ But this does not mean that the accused must lead the evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on the record, whether produced by prosecution or by the defence that the general exception would apply, then the presumption is removed and it is open to the Court to consider whether the evidence proves satisfactorily that the accused comes within the exception⁵ Thus where a right of private defence is not pleaded, the Court on finding on the evidence before it that the accused acted in his right of private defence is bound to take cognizance of the same⁶

It is also desirable that shorthand notes of proceedings of Sessions Courts should be maintained so as to ensure a full and accurate record of what happens in Court⁵

12 Plea of guilty — When may be accepted. — A plea of guilty may be accepted by the Court and the accused may be convicted thereon without the matter going before the assessors or the jury¹ But the Court is not bound to accept a plea of guilty in all cases On the other hand, the Court must carefully consider whether the accused has fully understood the nature of the charge to which he pleads guilty.² In cases where the natural sequence of accepting the plea of guilty would be a sentence of death, it is not in accordance with the usual practice to accept a plea of guilty.³ Murder is a mixed question of law and fact and unless the Court is satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was implied by his plea of guilty, the plea should not be accepted but the case should be tried, especially where the accused is an ignorant person.⁴ An accused person does not plead to a section of a criminal statute He pleads guilty or not guilty to the facts alleged that disclose an offence under that section. Sometimes a "plea of guilty" is an admission only of the facts alleged and not the offence, as when such facts do not in law constitute the offence⁵ So a plea of guilty cannot be accepted when the offence in question has not been committed in the eye of law⁶ A plea of guilty cannot be accepted when it is clear that the offence was not correctly stated to him.⁷ Each case depends, however, upon its own circumstances which should be examined to see whether the plea of guilty is one which should be acted upon.⁸ Where the prisoner has the services of a pleader and a plea of guilty is made advisedly the Court can certainly convict him on his plea.⁹ But where an accused, who is charged for an offence under s 302 Penal Code (for which there is a clear prima facie evidence), pleads guilty to an offence under section 301, Penal Code, the Court cannot accept the plea of guilty but should proceed to try him for the offence charged.¹⁰ There is no provision for an inquiry for the purpose of seeing if it is right and proper to convict the accused on his plea: if any such enquiry is necessary it should take the form of a trial and be conducted as such.¹¹

Though the section provides for a conviction being based on the accused's plea of guilty entered at the commencement of the proceedings, this does not mean that if at any later stage the accused pleads guilty the Court is not entitled to record the plea and convict the accused on such plea.¹²

13 "Thereon" in sub-section (2).—The word "thereon" shows that the conviction is on the plea recorded before the Sessions Judge and has no reference to what has passed before the Magistrate in the preliminary enquiry. So, if the accused makes a plea which amounts to a claim to be tried before the Sessions Judge, he cannot be convicted on a confession made before the committing Magistrate.¹

Where an accused pleads guilty to the offence charged, he may either be convicted for the offence or, as has been seen in Note 12 the regular trial may be proceeded with. He must not be convicted of a different offence of which he did not plead guilty and for which he was not tried.² Thus, a person pleading guilty to a charge of murder cannot be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.³ Similarly, a person pleading guilty to a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder cannot be convicted of causing grievous hurt.⁴ In order that there may be a conviction on a plea of guilty, the plea must be in respect of the offence charged. Thus where an accused was charged of murder but the Court finding that there was no evidence under that charge, convicted her of an offence under s 318 of the Penal Code considered to have been admitted by the accused, the conviction is illegal.⁵

The fact that the accused, tired of a lengthy trial or impressed by the weight of the evidence against him, or partly the one and partly the other, decides to cut short proceedings in the hope that a lenient sentence would be passed on him, is not in itself a ground for departing from the ordinary tariff of punishment for the offence.⁶

14. Procedure where plea of guilty is not accepted.—Section 272 provides that where an accused person refuses to or does not plead or claims to be tried, the Court shall proceed to try the case. There is no specific provision enabling the Court to try the case where the accused pleads guilty and the Court does not accept the same, though sub s (2) of this section provides that he may be convicted on such plea. In England where the Court does not think it expedient to act upon the accused's plea of guilty, the usual procedure is to advise him to withdraw his plea of guilty and to plead not guilty.¹ In this country, the general trend of opinion is that the accused may be treated in such cases as if he had pleaded not guilty, and that the trial may be proceeded with in the ordinary way.² The High Court of Calcutta has, however, in the undermentioned case,³ held that the discretion denoted by the word "may" is either to convict the accused, or in a suitable case, to leave the matter there and discharge him, but does not include the power to proceed with the trial against him. In this view it has further held therein that where a person has pleaded guilty, he ceases ipso facto to be an accused person. According to the Chief Court of Oudh the only course open to the Court where a plea of guilty is not accepted by it is to proceed to trial.⁴

As to the meaning of the word "conviction" in this subsection, see the undermentioned case.⁵

15. Plea of guilty by a co-accused — Under s 30 of the Evidence Act, when more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession. So the question arises whether in cases where one of several accused jointly tried pleads guilty to the charge, he can be said to be jointly tried within the meaning of s 30 of the Evidence Act so as to render his admissions receivable in evidence against the other accused. In the undermentioned case,¹ the High Court of Calcutta has held that where a person pleads guilty, the only course open to the Court (whether it accepts such plea or not) is either to convict him or discharge him and that he can no longer be said to be an accused person jointly tried with others. This view as has been seen in Note 14 in so far as it relates to cases where the plea is not accepted by the Court is against the general trend of opinion. In cases where the plea of guilty is accepted by the Court, a conviction should follow and the accused will, of course cease to be an accused person from that moment. Section 30 of the Evidence Act will not therefore apply.² In cases where the plea of guilty is not accepted by the Court and the Court proceeds to trial against him the accused does not cease to be so until the end of the trial and all the accused can be treated as being tried jointly within the meaning of s 30³. But will this alone make the plea of guilty by one accused capable of being taken into consideration against the other accused under s 30? In other words can a plea of guilty made before a Court be treated as the same as a confession "proved" in a Court? See S. 342 Note 2⁴ for this aspect of the question.

Where one of the accused pleads guilty and the Court accepts it, it should not defer his conviction in order that his confession may be considered against his co accused. Such a procedure is clearly against the spirit of the law⁴. The accused should be convicted at once⁵ and should be removed from the dock in which case he can give evidence against his co accused⁶. It is always desirable to pass a sentence completely before calling one accused who pleads guilty in a joint trial to give evidence against a co accused,⁷ so that the witness may give his evidence free of all corrupt influence which the fear of impending punishment and the desire to obtain immunity to himself at the expense of other prisoners might otherwise produce⁸. But the admissibility of the evidence of such accused pleading guilty ought not to be decided on the narrow technical ground that he had not been convicted but on the broad ground that when he gave his evidence he was not in charge of jury and no issue remained to be tried between him and the Crown⁹.

Where, in a joint trial, A is charged with murder and B with being an accessory after the fact, the question whether the deceased was murdered by A is an issue between B and the Crown and hence, the counsel for B is entitled to insist on the proof of the murder and challenge the evidence of it even if A has pleaded guilty¹⁰.

See also Note 8 on Section 253

16. Appeal — Where an accused pleads guilty and he is convicted thereon he has no right of appeal except as to the extent or legality of the sentence. See S. 412.

Where the Court has recorded that the accused pleaded guilty, the High Court cannot in a case in which the accused appeared by a pleader admit the affidavit of the accused for the purpose of showing that he did not plead guilty. If there has been any mistake in the matter it is the vakil, and not the client, who ought to make an affidavit¹.

1 Legislative changes — The first paragraph of this section corresponds to s 263 of the Code of 1861 and s 233 of the Code of 1872. The proviso corresponds to s 347 of the Code of 1861 and s 265 of the Code of 1872.

2 "Refuses to, or does not, plead, or if he claims to be tried" — An accused person charged with an offence can either plead guilty or may claim to be tried. A plea of not guilty is not recognised by the Code¹ though such a plea if made will be considered as amounting to a claim to be tried. As a matter of practice however the expression not guilty is generally used and is taken as amounting to a claim to be tried.

Where an accused makes no answer to the question whether he is guilty an enquiry should be made whether he is obstinately mute or is dumb ex visitatione dei. In either case a plea of claiming to be tried should be recorded and the trial proceeded with.² Where in answer to a charge of murder the accused stated "I did not mean to kill him why should I kill my brother? Nor did I strike him so much that he should die" it was held that the statement amounted to a plea of not guilty.³ See also the undermentioned case.⁴

Where an accused is put upon his trial and has pleaded "not guilty" to the charge or has claimed to be tried he is entitled to have the trial proceeded with⁵ as a protection against a future proceeding against him in respect of the same charge⁶. He cannot be released without trial on the ground that there is no case against him⁷. Nor can he be convicted without trial solely upon a confession before the committing Magistrate⁸. But according to the High Court of Bombay, it is open to the Sessions Judge, instead of proceeding to choose the jurors and trying the case, to refer the same to the High Court under S 433 if he is of opinion that the trial is not desirable⁹.

3. Trial by same jury or assessors of several offenders — Proviso. —

It has been seen in S 233 that where several charges are made against an accused person, the general rule is that each charge should be tried separately. The same principle will also apply where several persons are accused of offences in a case. The general rule is that they should be tried separately except in cases falling within S 239¹. This proviso enacts that in those cases in which several accused persons in a Sessions case are to be tried separately, it is not necessary to choose a fresh jury or a fresh set of assessors for each such separate trial, and that the same jury or assessors may act in all the trials, subject, of course, to the right of the accused provided in the Code to object to the jury or any one or more members of the jury².

But the same jury may try or the same assessors may aid in the trial of any number of accused persons in a case only one after the other and not simultaneously³. A simultaneous trial in such cases is an illegality which is not curable by S 537 of the Code⁴.

In the undermentioned case⁵ certain members of two opposing parties in a riot were sent up for trial under two distinct committals. After the close of the case for the prosecution in one of the cases, the Sessions Judge postponed the taking of the evidence for the defence and proceeded to examine the witnesses for the prosecution in the other case before the same jury. He then took the evidence of the witnesses for the defence in the first case and in the counter case in the order named and then summed up the facts in both the cases to the jury who returned a verdict in respect of all the accused. Princep, J., observed as follows:

"The law declares that the 'same jury may try as many accused persons successively as to the Court seems fit'. By this we understand that one trial is to follow the other, that is that on the conclusion of one trial, the same jury may proceed to try the accused in the next case. The law does not contemplate that two trials shall be conducted piecemeal in such a manner that at their conclusion the jury shall be called upon to decide at one and the same time upon two distinct classes of evidence which, though they have points in common, require careful discrimination as bearing a Substituted by A O for Local Government

1 Legislative changes

Difference between the Code of 1861 and the Code of 1872 —

The number of which a jury was to consist, under the Code of 1861, was five or an uneven number not less than five and not more than nine. This number was reduced to three in the Code of 1872. Both s 327 of the Code of 1861 and s 236 of the Code of 1872 however, dealt with the number of jury in Sessions Courts only.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

The provision as to the number of jury in the High Courts was newly added to the section in 1882.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

There was no change effected in the Code of 1898, but by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 12 [XII] of 1923, the word "five" in sub s. (2) of the section was substituted for the word "three" which occurred in the second paragraph of the old section. The proviso to the section was also newly added by the said Act of 1923.

2 Non-compliance with the section — Effect of — A trial by a jury consisting of a larger number of men than is authorized by the section is a nullity¹. Similarly, a trial by a jury consisting of a smaller number of men than that required by law is without jurisdiction².

3 "Jury," meaning of — See Section 267, Note 1

4 Jury in cases of offences punishable with death — Proviso. — As has been seen in s 263, the Provincial Government may direct that the trial of certain offences shall be by jury in any district. Where an offence punishable with death is so declared to be triable by jury, this proviso will apply, and the jury should consist of nine persons unless it is impracticable to get that number, in which case the number should be at least seven. Under s 326, the number of jurors to be summoned is to be double the number required for the trial. Where a lesser number of persons is summoned, and some of them do not attend, with the result that seven persons are empanelled, it cannot be said that it is impracticable to get a jury of nine, and consequently the tribunal is not one legally constituted¹. Where only fourteen persons were summoned but eleven of them were present out of whom, however, only seven were empanelled and it was not shown that it was not practicable to get nine persons, it was held that the jury was illegally constituted and the trial bad.²

But where eighteen persons were summoned out of whom only eight attended and consequently only a jury of seven was empanelled, it was held that the proceedings were not vitiated.³ Where, however, out of eighteen persons summoned only nine were present and the Judge chose seven jurors by lot and did not attempt to empanel the remaining two although no objection was taken to them, it was held that the trial was vitiated ab initio.⁴

Where there is nothing on the record to show whether the trial Court considered the practicability of having nine jurors, the High Court on appeal ought to proceed on the assumption that the trial in the lower Court took place in full accordance with the requirements of sub s (2) of this section.⁵

As to when an objection as to the constitution of the jury can be taken, see note 6 on Section 276

Synopsis

1. Scope of the section
2. Right to be tried by majority of jurors of the nationality of the accused
3. Privileges of Europeans other than British subjects
4. 'Who has been found. Indian British subjects'
5. 'European'

1. Scope of the section. — Section 275, as it stood before 1923, provided that, in a trial by jury of a person not an European or American, a majority of the jury should consist of persons who were neither Europeans nor Americans. Section 450, now repealed, provided that in all trials of European British subjects before the High Court or the Court of Session the accused may claim to be tried by jury, half the number of which should be Europeans or Americans, provided, in cases triable with the aid of assessors, he may, instead of claiming to be tried by jury, claim that half the number of assessors should be Europeans or Americans. Section 460, also now repealed, provided that in the case of an European not being a British subject or an American, half the number of the jury or assessors, as the case may be, should, if practicable, consist of Europeans or Americans.¹ This section and S 284A together deal with the matter dealt with by the said ss 275, 450 and 460, but with the following important changes.

In trials by jury —

If the accused is an European British subject, he may claim that the majority of the jury shall be Europeans or Americans. If the accused is an Indian British subject, he may claim that the majority of the jury shall consist of Indians. If he is an European not being a British subject, or an American, he may claim that a majority of the jury shall consist of Europeans or Americans and this will be allowed only where it is practicable

In trials with the aid of assessors —

If the accused is an European British subject, he may claim that all the assessors should be Europeans or Americans. If he is an Indian British subject, he may claim that all the assessors should be Indians. If he is an European not being a British subject or an American, he may claim that all the assessors shall be Europeans or Americans and this will be allowed where it is practicable to do so.

The claim to be tried as an European or Indian British subject mentioned in Ss. 529A and 528B is a different and distinct one from the claim to be tried by a majority of European or Indian jury as mentioned in this section, though it can only be put forward by a person who has, in the language of the section, been found under the provisions of the Code to be an European or an Indian British subject.²

A claim to be tried under this section can validly be made whether the complainant and the accused are both European or Indian British subjects, or one is an European and the other an Indian British subject³

2. Right to be tried by majority of jurors of the nationality of the accused. — Under the High Court Criminal Procedure Act, 1873, a person who was not an European British subject was not entitled to be tried by a jury consisting of a majority of persons who were neither Europeans nor Americans.¹ Such a right was first recognised by the Code of 1882. There is, however, no provision that the jurors should be co religionists with the accused²

3. Privileges of Europeans other than British subjects. — Europeans other than European British subjects or Americans have, under sub s (2) of this section, a right that a majority of the jury shall, if practicable, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans, and, under S 283A, in the case of trials with the aid of assessors, all the assessors shall, if practicable, be persons who are Europeans or Americans. They have no other special privileges¹

4. "Who has been found . . . Indian British subject." — It is not sufficient for the accused to merely assert that he is an European or Indian British subject. He should have been found under the provisions of this Code to belong to the particular nationality¹. As to such provisions, see Ss 413, 528A and 528B

5. "European" — An "Anglo Indian" is not an European within the meaning of this section¹

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

A proviso corresponding to the proviso first, second and third of this section was added in S 276 of the Code of 1882

The words "in such manner as the High Court may from time to time by rule direct" were newly added

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

The last paragraph of the proviso was newly added in 1898

Amendment in 1923 —

The words "in the Presidency Towns" were substituted by the words 'in a town before any High Court in the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court,' in proviso thirdly by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 18 (XVIII) of 1923

2 Scope of the section. — Section 326 provides that the names of those who are to be summoned to act as jurors should be drawn by lot from among the whole body of persons who are in the list of jurors. This section provides that those again who are to try a particular case are to be similarly chosen by lot from among the persons so summoned, or, where there is a deficiency, from amongst such other persons as might be present in Court. Where a Judge fails to obtain a panel in this manner, it is his duty to postpone the trial until the requisite number of jurors has been obtained in the manner provided by law¹. The object of these provisions is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case and an accused person has a right to claim to be tried by a jury chosen with strict regard to all the safeguards provided therein to secure perfect impartiality².

This section and the following Ss 277, 278 and 279 must be read together as prescribing the procedure for empanelling jurors³ the former, with all its provisos, being a general section dealing with the general nature of the procedure, the details of that procedure being given in the latter.⁴ The procedure to be adopted is as follows. In the first instance a ballot should be taken from among the persons summoned under s. 235,⁵ without any preliminary enquiry as to how many of them are present, i. e., the names of the persons summoned should be drawn from the box, one by one, each after another, and called aloud as each is drawn and the accused asked whether he has any objection to such juror. If he objects, the objection should be decided and the juror either retained or rejected as the case may be. When all the names have been so drawn and a number of persons have answered to their names and accepted without objection, a deficiency in the number of persons required, if any, will become manifest. The deficiency will be the number by which the number of persons answering their names and empanelled falls short of the number of persons of which the jury should consist. At this stage, the second proviso to the section begins to operate and the Court has to exercise a discretion whether to allow persons to be chosen from among those present in Court in sufficient number to supply the deficiency, or whether to adjourn the case for a fresh jury to be summoned. If the Court decides to choose from among the persons present, the accused should be asked as each such person is chosen, whether he objects to him and after deciding the objection should proceed to choose other persons present in the same manner until the deficiency is made up.⁶

A jury not empanelled in accordance with these principles is not one constituted in accordance with the law.⁷

3. "Shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act" — Sub section (2) of s. 279 indicates that the manner of choosing by lot provided by this section applies only to jurors attending in obedience to summons and not to persons selected from those present in Court.¹

The Judge is not required before he draws lots to ascertain how many of the persons summoned to serve as jurors are present. If by drawing the names one by one he is able to empanel a jury of 9 in a murder case then he has done all that the law requires him to do. It does not matter that only 9 persons out of 18 summoned were present. Choosing by lot does not mean that a smaller number must be chosen from a larger number.²

It is desirable, if not necessary, that the Judge should, where all the jurors have been chosen by lot, specifically state that they have been so chosen by lot.³ Where one of the jurors was a person who was not entitled to sit on the jury, having not been summoned, it was held that the Court was not properly constituted ⁴

Where, out of the persons summoned the Court asked those who knew English to sit apart and from out of such persons chose the number required by lot, and this procedure was consented to by the Public Prosecutor and by the counsel for the accused in view of the fact that there were in the case certain documents in English and identity of handwriting was a fact in issue, it was held that the choosing having been done by lot the action of the Court in making the choice from amongst those who knew English was well within its inherent powers of ensuring a fair trial ⁵

4. Deficiency of persons — Second proviso. — The word "juror" in the second proviso to the section is a general term meaning both special and common jurors and, therefore, the procedure provided therein for making up any deficiency in the number of persons summoned applies both to common as well as to special jurors called under the third and fourth provisos to the section ¹ Thus, where eighteen special jurors were summoned but only five were present, it was held that it was open to the Judge to supplement the five special jurors with persons who happened to be present though they were not in the special jury list ²

Where the jury, at the end of the billot, were found to be four short and four gentlemen fit to be jurors were chosen from among the by standers, it was held that the procedure adopted was correct ³

As has been seen in Note 2 above, the Court has a discretion in case of a deficiency in the number of persons summoned, either to choose the number of jurors required from among those present and proceed with the trial, or to adjourn the trial ⁴ But the persons from amongst whom the deficiency is made up must be present in Court Persons who are not present in Court cannot be sent for, for the purpose of being called as jurors and then chosen A trial with a jury consisting of persons so chosen is not a trial by a jury empanelled according to law ⁵

A person is present within the meaning of the section if he is in the precincts of the Court building either because he has been summoned for other cases or by mere chance. It is not necessary that he should be present within the four walls of the actual court room in which the proceedings are being conducted. The intention of the Legislature is only to prevent the summoning of the individuals from the locality where a deficiency occurs in the number of persons summoned ⁶

There is no provision in the Code by which the Court is to ascertain beforehand how many of the persons summoned to serve as jurors have attended and thus to determine the deficiency which has to be supplied. The stage at which it should be ascertained whether the persons summoned have attended or not is not reached until their names are called out for the purpose of empanelling a jury.⁷

The deficiency mentioned in the proviso refers to the deficiency in the number required to make up the quorum under S 274 and not to the deficiency in the minimum number required for drawing lots.⁸

The word 'chosen' in the proviso simply means "selected" and not "chosen by lot".⁹

5 Special jury — Provisos 3 and 4 deal with cases in which a special jury may be summoned.¹ A special juror is a person whose name has been entered in a special list of persons prepared under Ss 313 and 325 such persons having been selected by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education which make them fit to serve as special jurors. Where the accused is charged with an offence punishable with death, a trial before the High Court should invariably be by a special jury. In other trials before the High Court if the Judge so directs the jurors may be chosen from the special jury list. In the undermentioned case² in which the accused was charged with an offence under section 121A of the Penal Code, the High Court allowed a special jury.

The Sind Judicial Commissioners Court (now the Chief Court of Sind) is a High Court within the meaning of proviso 3 to this section, and a Judge of that Court exercising jurisdiction as a Sessions Court has power to direct a special jury to be empanelled under clause (b) of the proviso.³

The word "chosen" in provisos 3 and 4 means "chosen by lot" as in the substantive part of the section.⁴

6 Defect in selecting jurors by lot — There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether a defect or irregularity in the constitution of the jury, as for example in not selecting jury men by lot, is one curable by the application of S 537. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras¹ Nagpur² and Patna³ and the Chief Court of Oudh⁴ that it is curable under S 537. On the other hand, the High Courts of Allahabad⁵ and Calcutta⁶ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁷ have taken a contrary view on the ground that an irregularity in the constitution of the jury affects the constitution of the Court and its competence. It is submitted that the latter view is preferable.

It has been held that an objection as to the constitution of the jury under S 274⁸ or as to any defect or irregularity in the constitution of the jury under this section⁹ cannot be taken for the first time in appeal. It is submitted that this view is open to criticism. If the objection is one which affects the very constitution of the Court, it must be one affecting the jurisdiction of the Court itself, and, under general principles of law, can be raised at any time.¹⁰

The Calcutta High Court¹¹ has held that in a murder case the proper time for taking objection that it is practicable to obtain nine persons for the jury is at the time when the jury is being empanelled. If the accused desires to make a substantial objection on this ground in appeal, his petition should indicate that at least there are materials to substantiate his case that it was so practicable. It is also desirable that the attention of the Court should be drawn to this matter when the application for admission of appeal is moved in order that if necessary an explanation may be obtained from the trial Judge.

7 High Court rules as to balloting — See the undermentioned case.¹

277.* (1) As each juror is chosen, his name shall be called aloud, and upon his appearance, the accused shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such juror.

(2) Objection may then be taken to such juror by the accused or by the prosecutor, and the grounds of objection shall be stated.

Provided that, in the High Court, objections without grounds stated shall be allowed to the number of eight on behalf of the Crown and eight on behalf of the person or all the persons charged.

1 Legislative changes (Omitted)

2 Objection as to partiality — Clause (a) — Where a juror who was the head master of a school of one X was alleged to be an acquaintance of the Public Prosecutor who was alleged to be the retained pleader of the estate of the said X the accused himself having nothing to do with X it was held that that fact was not a valid ground of objection within the meaning of this section.¹ But where it appeared that there was litigation pending between the accused's master and another person whose agent the juror was it was held that the facts gave a ground for presumed partiality in the juror.²

3 Inability to understand language — Clause (g) — Inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given or when such evidence is interpreted the language in which it is interpreted is a valid ground of objection. The effect of the incompetence of the juror on this ground is to deny to the accused an essential part of the protection accorded to him by law¹ See also S 297, Note 16

4 Failure to object — Effect of. — The objection to each juror must be raised upon his appearance in obedience to the call made under s 277. A failure to object to a juror at that time would amount to a waiver¹ and if the trial proceeds the constitution of the jury cannot be assailed later on²

In Ras Behari Lal v Emperor,³ a juror had been empanelled and joined in a verdict of guilty who could not understand the language in which the evidence was given. Such inability was unknown to the accused until after the event. In these circumstances, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there was a grave injustice or a "scandal and perversion of justice". Accordingly the conviction was set aside and the Crown was left to take such course as to a new trial as the law would allow. In *Alexander Kennedy v The King*⁴ an objection was raised to certain members of the jury on the ground of actual or presumed partiality, but the objection was not raised at the time when the jury was empanelled because the accused was not aware of the facts at that time. It was contended on the authority of Ras Behari Lal's case that in such cases the objection should be given effect to and that the conviction should be quashed. This contention was rejected by the Privy Council which observed as follows:

'Their Lordships see nothing in that decision (Ras Behari Lal's case) to warrant the wide proposition contended for that in every case in which there was material for a successful challenge and it was not made for excusable reasons an adverse verdict should be set aside

Decision on objection 279. (1) Every objection taken to a juror shall be decided by the Court, and such decision shall be recorded and be final.

(2) If the objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons against whom objections and chosen in manner provided by section 276, or object on allowed if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors, or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury

Provided that no objection to such juror or other person is taken under section 278 and allowed

1 Legislative changes — The word recorded in sub-s. (1) of the section was not present in the Code of 1861 or of 1872. It was introduced in S 279 of the Code of 1892.

2 Scope and object of the section — As has been seen in the Notes on S 276 the object of Ss. 276 to 279 is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case¹.

Section 276 is a general section dealing with the general nature of the procedure. The details of that procedure are given in Ss. 277 to 279². Sub-section (2) of this section deals with a case where there is no effective lot owing to absence or objection or both and it provides how the number is to be completed³. It contemplates the possibility of a person not in the jury list being chosen to serve on the jury in case of emergency⁴.

3 Objection to a juror — Decision on — Every objection taken to a juror must be decided by the Court and it should make a record of such decision¹. Where an objection on any of the grounds (a) to (g) of S 278 is made out to the satisfaction of the Court it shall be allowed. An objection on the ground of any other circumstance will be allowed only when in the opinion of the Court such circumstance renders the juror improper to act as such². The Court has a wide discretion in the matter of accepting or overruling objections and in this respect its decision is final³. Thus where an objection being taken as to the presumed or actual partiality in a juror the Court decides that no such partiality has been made out that decision is absolutely final and cannot be challenged in appeal⁴. If however the Court finds that such partiality has been made out but in spite of that finding the Court overrules the objection the decision may according to the undermentioned case⁵ perhaps be challenged in appeal.

4 Procedure on allowing objection to juror — Sub-section (2) — Where an objection to a juror is allowed his place should be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in the manner provided by S 276 i.e. by lot. If no such juror is present his place should be supplied by any other person present in Court whose name is on the jury list or whom the Court considers a proper person to serve on the jury subject to a successful objection as stated in the proviso¹. This latter selection need not as has been seen in the Notes on S 26 be *by lot*² though it must only

It has been held that where the verdict has been set aside on appeal and the case remanded for retrial and the jury empanelled on the second occasion has included the foreman of the jury at the former trial the case should not proceed by simply discharging this juror and substituting in his place another person The proceedings should be held before an entirely new jury²

1. Legislative changes. — The provision as to the adding of a new juror when "any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted" did not exist in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 but was newly added in the Code of 1882

1a. Scope of the section. — This section is limited to cases where a jury has been properly empanelled at the outset and one or more of the casualties which are bound to occur sometimes in human lives has in fact occurred. Sub section (2) of this section also contemplates the addition of a juror after the trial of the case has begun and not before¹

2. Inherent power of Court to discharge jury.—The Code provides for the discharge of the jury only in the following cases

(1) Under this section when in the course of the trial a juror is absent, or is unable to attend, or does not understand the language of the proceedings.

(2) Under s 283 when the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar

(3) Under s 305 where, in trials before the High Court, the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority of the jury

But the said sections are not exhaustive of all the circumstances under which a jury may be discharged. In a case which obviously demands interference but which is not within those for which the Code specifically provides, the Court has an inherent power to make such order as the ends of justice require¹. Thus, a Judge may discharge a jury on the ground that a juror has misconducted himself during the trial,² or on the ground that the Judge finds reason for doubting the impartiality of the jury.³ The power should not, however, be exercised lightly nor until the Judge has satisfied himself by judicial inquiry that reasonable grounds exist for exercising such a right.⁴ But the Judge is not bound to hold an inquiry whenever a juror is alleged to have misconducted himself. The question whether the Judge should or should not hold an inquiry is a matter within his discretion.⁵ The Judge has undoubted jurisdiction for the purposes of such inquiry to call upon persons to appear before him to administer oath to them and to require them to give evidence.⁶ A juror may be guilty of misconduct where he is found talking to the Court Inspector when the case is called on for hearing⁷ or where during the progress of the trial he talks to persons connected with the accused or discusses the case which is being tried before him.⁸ A mere expression of opinion to a friend in a private conversation will not, however, be a ground for discharging the jury.⁹ Nor can the jury be discharged merely because a witness for the defence does not attend and a postponement of the case is asked for.¹⁰

Where the foreman of the jury gave out the verdict in Court after the prosecution evidence was over and before the defence evidence was let in it was held in the under mentioned case¹¹ that the Judge had no power to discharge the jury and that he should have proceeded with the trial after explaining to the jury their error in not waiting until all the evidence was over. In a somewhat similar case in the Calcutta High Court, the Advocate General was allowed to enter a nolle prosequi under S 333 and the difficulty was thus got over.¹²

the ground that a juror has misconducted himself during the trial² or on the ground that the Judge finds reason for doubting the impartiality of the jury³. The power should not however be exercised lightly nor until the Judge has satisfied himself by judicial inquiry that reasonable grounds exist for exercising such a right⁴. But the Judge is not bound to hold an inquiry whenever a juror is alleged to have misconducted himself. The question whether the Judge should or should not hold an inquiry is a matter within his discretion⁵. The Judge has undoubted jurisdiction for the purposes of such inquiry to call upon persons to appear before him to administer oath to them and to require them to give evidence⁶. A juror may be guilty of misconduct where he is found talking to the Court Inspector when the case is called on for hearing⁷ or where during the progress of the trial he talks to persons connected with the accused or discusses the case while he is being tried before him⁸. A mere expression of opinion to a friend in a private conversation will not however be a ground for discharging the jury⁹. Nor can the jury be discharged merely because a witness for the defence does not attend and a postponement of the case is asked for¹⁰.

Where the foreman of the jury gave out the verdict in Court after the prosecution evidence was over and before the defence evidence was let in it was held in the under mentioned case¹¹ that the Judge had no power to discharge the jury and that he should have proceeded with the trial after explaining to the jury their error in not waiting until all the evidence was over. In a somewhat similar case in the Calcutta High Court the Advocate General was allowed to enter a nolle prosequi under S 333 and the difficulty was thus got over¹².

Where a juror is found guilty of misconduct during trial the Judge is however not bound to discharge the whole jury. He may deal with the matter on the analogy of

1. Legislative changes. — The provision as to the adding of a new juror when "any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted" did not exist in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 but was newly added in the Code of 1882.

1a. Scope of the section. — This section is limited to cases where a jury has been properly empanelled at the outset and one or more of the casualties which are bound to occur sometimes in human lives has in fact occurred. Sub section (2) of this section also contemplates the addition of a juror after the trial of the case has begun and not before.¹

2. Inherent power of Court to discharge jury.—The Code provides for the discharge of the jury only in the following cases

- (1) Under this section when in the course of the trial a juror is absent, or is unable to attend, or does not understand the language of the proceedings.
- (2) Under s 283 when the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar
- (3) Under s 305 where, in trials before the High Court, the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority of the jury

But the said sections are not exhaustive of all the circumstances under which a jury may be discharged. A jury can be discharged by the Judge in the exercise of his inherent power even after the verdict has been recorded¹⁴

Where an order discharging a jury in the exercise of the inherent power of a Sessions Judge is found to be unjustified the only relief that the High Court can give is to order a fresh trial before another jury¹⁵

3 "Is prevented from attending throughout the trial" — Whether a juror is prevented from attending throughout the trial depends, among other things, on the days during which the trial is going to take place, and whether an adjournment should be given for any length of time. There is a discretion in the Judge whether to postpone the trial to a date on which the juror should be able to attend or to discharge the jury. If the juror is able to attend in a very short time it is a wrong exercise of discretion to discharge the jury¹

4 "The trial shall commence anew" — Where a new juror is added or the jury is discharged under this section the trial must commence anew and cannot be continued from the stage at which the juror or the jury was discharged. Thus, where after the examination of some witnesses in the case a juror was found to be deaf and was consequently discharged and a new juror added it was held that the trial should have commenced anew¹. Similarly where in the course of a trial it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted the language in which it is interpreted a new juror should be added or the jury should be discharged and a fresh jury empanelled and the trial must commence anew²

1 Legislative changes.

- 1 The words "two or more persons" which occurred in S 312 of the Code of 1861 were omitted in S 219 of the Code of 1872 but were re introduced in S 281 of the Code of 1882

2 Amendment by Act 12 [XII] of 1923 —

(a) The words "not less than three and if practicable, four" have been substituted for the words "two or more"

(b) The words "as the Judge thinks fit" have been omitted.

2. "Not less than three." — Under the present section as amended in 1923, there should at least be three assessors. Prior to this amendment, the minimum number required was two. The section is imperative, and where at least the minimum number of assessors do not attend, the Court is not properly constituted and has no jurisdiction to try the case¹

3. "And if practicable, four." — Where a lesser number of assessors than four is chosen the Court should give reasons to explain the impracticability of having four. But a trial with three assessors without a record of these reasons is not irregular and does not offend against the provisions of this section¹

4 "Shall be chosen," meaning of. — This section, unlike S 276, does not prescribe that the assessors are to be chosen by lot. In fact it does not say that they ought to be chosen in any particular manner. It is not the law that the assessors must be chosen by lot. The word "chosen" does not necessarily imply that there ought to be a selection from a larger number than required for the trial¹

A mere choosing of assessors is not enough. They must function as assessors at the trial. It is only when proceedings are commenced at which assessors can give their aid, that the trial with their aid as contemplated under S 268 and this section can be said to have commenced. So where, though the required number of assessors is chosen as required by this section, some of them are discharged on some ground or other before the trial actually starts, and the same goes on with less than the required number of assessors, the requirements of this section are not satisfied²

during examination of first witness on ground of having personal knowledge—Owing to his disqualification it must be deemed that trial did not commence with minimum number of assessors required]]

There is no provision in the case of assessors corresponding to S 282 as in the case of jurors. Even if the principle of that section applied the fact that an assessor (who understands the language of the Court) does not understand English will not invalidate a trial unless there has been a failure to interpret in the court language evidence which had been given in English. Similarly the fact that some documents are in English which the assessor is unable to understand will not go against the competency of the assessor or the lawful constitution of the Court.³

7 Procedure when an assessor is discovered subsequently to be interested in the case

— See Section 283, Note 6

8 Power of appellate Court to appoint assessors — An appellate Court has no power to appoint the assessors for the purposes of appeal.¹

9 Effect of non compliance with the section — The provisions of this section are mandatory so where a trial commences and proceeds with less than minimum number of assessors¹ or where some of the required number of assessors are appointed out of persons not summoned to act as such,² the Court is not properly constituted and the whole trial is illegal. But where an assessor summoned to appear on a particular date for the purpose of any particular case appears, only on a different date, and a different case is started with him as one of the assessors³ or where only three assessors are chosen without giving reasons for not choosing four (after the amendment in 1923)⁴ the trial is not illegal. Where a trial for murder commenced with three assessors and one of them was discharged by the Judge during the examination of the very first witness on the ground of the assessor having personal knowledge of the case, it was held that owing to this disqualification of one of the assessors the trial must be deemed to have commenced, in substance though not in fact with only two assessors.⁵

1 Legislative changes

(1) There is no material difference between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872

(2) The words prevented from attending throughout the trial which occurred in s 259 of the Code of 1872 have been substituted by the words prevented from attendance in the Codes of 1882 and 1898

* Code of 1898 S 460

460. In every case triable by jury or with the aid of assessors in which an European (not being a British subject) or an American is the accused person or one of the accused persons not less than half the number of jurors or assessors shall if practicable and if such European or American so claims be Europeans or Americans

† 1882 S 285, 1872 S 259, 1861 S 353

2 Scope and applicability of the section — This section applies only where, in the course of a trial an assessor is unable to attend. It contemplates the case of a trial which has commenced with the requisite number of assessors who at the commencement of the trial were capable of acting as competent assessors. It has no application to trials conducted from the start with less than the requisite number of competent assessors.¹

There must be at least one assessor attending throughout the proceedings² and this requirement is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court.³

This section constitutes an exception to S 251 and is confined in its operation to cases where the assessor himself is prevented from attending the trial by reason of infirmity or some other physical disability. It does not contemplate a case where the trial Judge himself discharges one of the assessors on the ground that he is disqualified from acting as an assessor.⁴

3 "Prevented from attending, or absent themselves" — Sub section (2) — The words "prevented from attending or absent themselves" in sub s (2) of this section should be read with sub s (1) and should be understood to mean "prevented from attending throughout the trial or absent themselves".¹

4 "Shall proceed with the aid of the other assessor or assessors" — This procedure has to be adopted only when it is not practicable to enforce the attendance of the absentee assessor. Where the Judge allowed one of two assessors to absent himself for one of the days of the trial and proceeded to try the case with the other assessor it was held that the Judge ought not to have proceeded with the trial but should have adjourned the trial till a day when both assessors could attend.¹ Where an assessor absents himself he should not be allowed to return and take part in the proceedings at a later stage.² The reason is that when once the trial is resumed by the Judge in the absence of an assessor such assessor ceases to occupy the position of an assessor aiding at the trial.³ If consequently he is allowed to return and take part in the proceedings and give his opinion the procedure is not in accordance with law⁴ and is contrary to the intentions of this section and S 255.⁵ The procedure is however only an irregularity which is cured by s 537 unless it has occasioned a failure of justice⁶

In the case of the absence of an assessor the Judge before proceeding with the trial with the aid of remaining assessors should ascertain whether his absence was due to sufficient cause. If he proceeds with the trial without ascertaining whether his absence was due to sufficient cause and without taking steps practicable to enforce his attendance this is a material irregularity which vitiates the trial⁷

5 All assessors absent — Sub-section (2) — It has been seen already in Note 2 that for a valid trial at least one assessor must attend throughout the trial. If all the assessors are prevented from attending or no one assessor is able to attend throughout the trial the proceedings should be stayed and a new trial held with the aid of fresh assessors¹. But a Sessions Judge is only authorized to record evidence in the absence of the jury or the assessors when additional evidence is called for by the appellate Court under s 498 sub s (3)² or by the High Court under s 375 sub s (2). Where material evidence was recorded after all the assessors were discharged it was held that such evidence was recorded coram non iudice, — that is before a tribunal which had no authority to record it³. The same principle will apply where there was no assessor present during the address on behalf of the accused⁴. The non compliance with this sub-section affects the jurisdiction of the Court and the irregularity is therefore, not one curable under section 537⁵.

6 If assessor is an interested person — Procedure — Where it is discovered after the trial has begun in a case tried with the aid of assessors that one of them is interested or otherwise unfit to sit as an assessor, this section does not apply as the assessor is neither prevented from attending nor absents himself. In such a case the Sessions Judge should ask the High Court under s 438 to set aside the order by which the incompetent assessor was appointed as well as all the subsequent proceedings and then choose another assessor and proceed with the trial *de novo*¹. Where however, at the end of the trial one of the assessors expresses the opinion that the accused is guilty adding that he has personal knowledge of the matter there is no necessity of a de novo trial as the assessor cannot be said to be an interested person. The proper course for the Judge is simply to ignore the opinion of the assessor if he comes to the conclusion that it is improperly expressed or that he has been influenced by extra judicial considerations.²

DD — Joint trials.

285A. In any case in which an European or American is accused jointly with a person not being an European or American, or an Indian British subject is accused jointly with a person not being an Indian, and such European, Indian British subject or American is committed for trial before a Court of Session, he and such other person may be tried together, but if he requires to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275 or section 284A and is so tried, and the other person accused requires to be tried separately, such other person shall be tried separately in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter.

1 Legislative changes — This section together with the heading, was inserted by the Criminal Law Amendment Act 12 (XII) of 1923

Compare ss 452 and 461 of the Code of 1887 s 212 of the Code of 1861 and s 3 of the Code of 1861.

The undermentioned cases¹ under s 452 of the Code which have now been repealed are no longer of any importance

2. "And is so tried"—The words "and is so tried" in this section mean "if he is in fact so tried" or "if he is eventually so tried". Thus a European was accused jointly with an Indian and when they appeared for the first time before the Sessions Judge the European wanted to be tried as a European British subject and the other accused wanted to be tried jointly with him. The Sessions Judge instead of stating the proceedings under s 271 referred the matter for the orders of the High Court as it was not possible to get sufficient European jurors in the place. The High Court directed the case to be tried by another Sessions Court. The Indian accused when he appeared before the latter Court claimed to be tried separately and contended that as no trial was in progress when he had previously stated that he did not want to be tried separately he was not bound by his previous choice. The contention was held to be untenable¹

3 Failure to claim separate trial—Effect — See Section 528B. See also the undermentioned case¹

1 Legislative changes — This section was first introduced in its present form by the Act of 1887 and remains unaltered in the present Code

2 "When the jurors or assessors have been chosen" — After the jurors are sworn the trial should proceed and cannot be postponed to enable the prosecution to examine a witness on commission¹ If after the swearing in of the jury, the Judge is unable to attend as where he falls ill suddenly the trial can proceed further before a new Judge with the same jury provided no evidence has been taken and, if taken the latter Judge does not act upon it²

3. "The prosecutor shall open his case" — The opening of the prosecution must always be confined to matters which are necessary to enable the jury to follow the evidence The prosecutor will have to state all that it is proposed to prove in the case so that the jury may see if there is any discrepancy between the opening statement of the prosecutor and the evidence afterwards adduced in support thereof It would be wholly improper for him to open any matter to the jury in respect whereof no evidence is intended to be read or can be adduced at the trial Nor is it the stage where a doubtful question of admissibility should be raised or decided Very great care must be taken by the prosecutor in the observations to be made to the jury and topics of prejudice connected with the character of the prisoner should be carefully excluded¹

The prosecutor should state in his opening address, who the witnesses are whom he proposes to call and who have not already been examined Though the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before the committing Magistrate is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of a relevant witness tendered for the prosecution the examination of additional witnesses should not as a general rule be sprung as a surprise on the accused² The Court should see that the prosecution puts forward a real case from the beginning and sticks to it up to the end³

A Full Bench of the High Court of Lahore has expressed an opinion in the unmentioned cases⁴ that, in accordance with the practice of the English Courts, a summary of the evidence proposed to be called should be given to the Sessions Court and the accused before the trial if a witness has not been called in the committing Magistrate's Court.

4 "By reading"—The accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact value of the charge brought against him for unless he has such knowledge, he may be seriously prejudiced in his defence¹.

5. Examination of accused before opening of case.—Section 312 of the Code empowering the Court to examine the accused at any stage must be read subject to the provisions of this section. Therefore a Court should not before the prosecutor opens his case and examines his witnesses under this section examine the accused under section 312¹.

6 "Shall then examine his witnesses"—The prosecution witnesses should, as far as possible, be called to prove events in their chronological order¹. It is entirely in the discretion of the Public Prosecutor to say what witnesses he will examine² and in what order. The Judge cannot dictate to the prosecution the order in which the witnesses are to that he has also been summoned by the defence,⁸ or that a serious charge is made against the witness by the accused.⁹ At the same time, the prosecution should exercise a careful discrimination and avoid the piling up of evidence, the overburdening of the record and consequent waste of time.¹⁰ There is no provision in the Code entitling the prisoner to have a witness for the prosecution who is not called, put into the witness box for cross-examination. The accused may apply to have such witness examined under § 291, if he so requires.¹¹ Nevertheless the Public Prosecutor in fairness should explain to the Court his reason for not calling his witness and offer to put him in the box for cross-examination by the accused,¹² especially where the witness is a material one and whose evidence has been relied upon by the committing Magistrate.¹³ But where the Public Prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is a false one, he need not even tender him for cross examination.¹⁴ Where any witness known to the prosecution is able to swear to facts very material to the case the practice of merely allowing him to be tendered for cross examination is not proper but he must be examined in the ordinary way as to the facts known to him.¹⁵ In undefended cases the Court should in the interests of justice test the statement of the witnesses for the prosecution by questions in the nature of cross examination.¹⁶ It cannot, however, take

Their Lordships do not desire to lay down any rules to fetter discretion on a matter such as this which is so dependent on the particular circumstances of each case. Still less do they desire to discourage the utmost endeavour and fairness on the part of those conducting prosecutions, but at the same time they cannot, speaking generally, approve of an idea that a prosecution must call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, or that a prosecution ought to discharge the functions both of prosecution and defence. If it does so confusion is very apt to result and never is it more likely to result than if the prosecution calls witnesses and then proceeds almost automatically to discredit them by cross examination. Witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based must, of course be called by the prosecution whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution."

Though there is nothing in the Code which says that the prosecutor at a committal trial can examine only such witnesses as have been examined before a committing Magistrate²⁰ yet the prosecutor cannot as of right demand that any witness who was not examined by the committing Magistrate either under S 203 or S 219 should be called and examined but the Court may call and examine such a witness if it considers it necessary in the interests of justice.²¹ But only the witnesses examined in the committing

Magistrate's Court can be bound down to attend in the Sessions Court. If the witnesses are not so examined the prosecution has to depend upon such witnesses being willing to give evidence without being bound down to appear or upon being able to persuade the Court under S 540 to summon such a witness.²² The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that where a material witness has not been examined in the committing Magistrate's Court his evidence cannot be relied on in the Sessions Court.²³ A Sessions Judge commits a material irregularity in procedure in refusing to take the evidence of the persons called as witnesses. Further even if justified in so refusing, he should leave upon record clear and distinct reasons for adopting such a course.²⁴ Where a case is tried by jury the witnesses cannot be examined in the absence of the jury and their evidence if taken cannot be acted upon.²⁵

When a material prosecution witness examined in the committing Magistrate's Court is not examined in the Sessions Court it is open to the Judge either to draw an adverse inference against the Crown or to examine the witness as a court witness. But the Judge cannot compel the prosecution to examine such witness as a prosecution witness or to tender him for cross examination.²⁶

7. Examination must be oral — The examination referred to in this section means oral examination of the witnesses present (except in cases where evidence is taken by commission or where the witness is deaf or dumb). Oral examination is therefore, the general rule and it is of utmost importance that the rule should be followed in all cases where the witness is present to be examined. The demeanour of the witness may be important for the assessor or Judge in forming an opinion of his truth.¹

9 Attendance of witnesses — See Section 216

10 Cross examination to follow examination in-chief — The cross examination of every witness should follow his examination in chief. See S 138 of the Evidence Act of 1872. It is both irregular and inconvenient to allow all the witnesses to be examined one day and to reserve the cross examination to a subsequent date.¹ The accused is, therefore, not entitled as of right to postponement of the cross examination. The Court may however grant such a postponement on reasonable grounds as for instance, where the counsel is unprepared,² or where the accused was undefended the first day and put

14. Trial ought not to be stopped before the close of the prosecution. — Sessions cases cannot be tried piecemeal. Before commencing a trial a Judge should satisfy himself that all necessary evidence is available. If it is not, he may postpone the case, but once having commenced he should, except for some very pressing reason, proceed de die in diem till the trial is finished,¹ the intention of the Code being that a trial before the Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously from its inception to its finish.²

Where, after the examination of some prosecution witnesses, some more remain to be examined, it is not open to the Judge to ask the jury whether they wish to hear any more evidence and, on their stating that they do not believe the evidence and wish to stop the case, record a verdict of acquittal, such a procedure is not warranted by law and no final opinion as to the reliability or otherwise of the evidence ought to be arrived at by the Judge or jury until the whole evidence is before them and has been considered.³

15 Treatment of witnesses. — A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth. This course is not sanctioned by law and is one which ought not to be followed.¹

It is also illegal for a Judge to threaten a witness with the penalties of the law and no Judge should allow anything in the nature of a threat to be administered to a witness unless and until he has shown by his evidence that he is wilfully saying what is false or persistently refusing to give evidence on facts which must be within his knowledge.

1 Scope of the section — This section makes it obligatory on the prosecution in all cases to tender in evidence the statement of the accused made before the committing Magistrate and duly recorded by him under the provisions of the Code *whether such statement tells for or against the accused*¹ The statement so tendered and read as evidence has the same effect as any other evidence adduced before the Sessions Judge² If the accused has confessed his guilt in such statement he can be convicted on the basis of such confession³ though he may retract the confession before the Sessions Judge⁴ Similarly the accused is entitled to rely on such statement to prove points in his favour though under the ordinary law of evidence he would not be entitled to make use of self serving statements by him as evidence in his favour⁵

The section does not contemplate that the committing Magistrate should be called as a witness in the Sessions Court and examined with reference to the recorded statement⁶ In fact the record of the statement prepared by the committing Magistrate would be the only evidence admissible to prove the statement (See Evidence Act S 91) But under S 533 if in recording the statement any of the provisions of S 361 are not complied with evidence may be taken for the purpose of proving that the statement was made by the accused before the committing Magistrate

The section does not prescribe the stage at which the statement of the accused should be produced and read as evidence But it has been held that the statement should be read as part of the case for the prosecution before the accused enters upon his defence⁷

The statement of the accused must be read as a whole. Thus where there are several accused in a case and the statement made by one of them in the committing Magistrate's Court is read in the Sessions Court under this section the portions touching the other accused cannot be omitted.⁸ But under S 310 if any portion of the statement bears on an alleged previous conviction charged against the accused, for the purpose of affecting the sentence to be passed on him in case of conviction such portion should not be read or referred to unless and until the accused has been convicted of the substantive offence or the verdict of the jury has been delivered or the opinion of the assessors has been recorded.

As to the weight to be attached to confessions conviction on the confession of a co-accused and the value of retracted confessions see Notes on Ss 161, 361 and 337.

2 "Duly recorded" — An accused person made a confession under improper inducement by the police. The committing Magistrate admitted the confession in evidence and examined the accused with regard to it. It was held that as the confession was not admissible in evidence (Evidence Act S 21) the committing Magistrate ought not to have questioned the accused with reference to it and that the examination of the accused under these circumstances could not be said to be duly recorded within the meaning of this section and could not be produced in evidence in the Sessions Court under this section.¹ So also an admission made by the accused before the committing Magistrate in answer to questions by the latter when there is no evidence implicating the accused is not "duly recorded."²

A written statement filed by the accused in answer to questions put to him by the committing Magistrate cannot be considered to be a document containing the examination of the accused duly recorded within the meaning of this section and must therefore be excluded from the records of the case.³

As to the mode of recording the examination of the accused, see S 361 and the Notes thereon. As to the effect of irregularities in the mode of recording the examination, see S 533 and Notes thereon.

3 "Committing Magistrate" — The words 'committing Magistrate' in the section include the Magistrate who held the preliminary enquiry on which the commitment was based although the actual order of commitment was made by some other Magistrate. Hence the statement of the accused recorded by a Magistrate who held the preliminary enquiry is admissible under this section although the case was actually committed to the sessions by some other Magistrate.¹ Thus where a Magistrate who succeeds to the jurisdiction of another Magistrate commits a case to the sessions under S 350 on evidence recorded by his predecessor the statement of the accused recorded by such predecessor is admissible under this section.²

1. Legislative changes.

- (1) There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. The section was first enacted in the Code of 1872. The undermentioned are cases decided under the Code of 1861¹
- (2) The words "duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chap XVIII" were substituted for the words "duly taken in the presence of the accused before the committing Magistrate," and the words "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872," were inserted at the end of the section by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 18 [XVIII] of 1923.

2 Scope, object and applicability of the section — This section provides that when a witness is produced and examined in the Sessions Court, his evidence in the commitment proceedings may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, be treated as evidence at the trial for all purposes. But for this section such evidence would, under the Evidence Act, be only admissible for the purpose of corroborating or contradicting the witness (see ss 145, 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act)¹. It would not be admissible as substantive evidence, i.e., for proving the truth of the facts deposed to except when the witness is not produced in the Sessions Court for any of the reasons specified in s 33 of the Evidence Act. The present section vests a discretion in the Sessions Judge to treat such evidence as substantive evidence in the case though none of the conditions laid down in s 33 of the

The section does not ipso facto make the evidence before the committing Magistrate evidence at the trial It only confers a discretion on the Sessions Judge to treat as evidence before himself the evidence of a witness given before the committing Magistrate⁴ But, where under the Evidence Act the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used at the sessions trial for any purpose this section in no way restricts such use⁵ Thus, for instance, where the witness is not examined in the Sessions Court his evidence in the committing Magistrate's Court can be admitted in the Sessions Court under s 33 of the Evidence Act if the conditions of that section are satisfied But where those conditions are not satisfied the evidence cannot be treated as substantive evidence in the Sessions Court in such cases⁶

The power conferred by the section is intended to be exercised with reference to each witness individually The section does not contemplate a general order being passed with reference to the evidence of all the witnesses or a number of them *together*⁷

The section applies only to sessions trials and not to trials before Magistrates⁸ But it applies to trials with assessors as well as to trials by jury⁹ In the undermentioned case¹ it was remarked that the section applies only to prosecution witnesses and that the position of the section shows this

The reasons given by the Magistrate in discharging the accused at first and the contents of the Sessions Judge's order in revision directing further inquiry are not admissible in the Sessions Court when the case is committed to sessions subsequently¹⁰

3 "Duly recorded in the presence of the accused." — This section applies only to the evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused by the committing Magistrate Hence the existence of a record or memorandum of evidence is a condition precedent to the applicability of the section.¹

Further the evidence must have been duly recorded (As to the mode of recording evidence in commitment proceedings see chapter XXV of the Code) Under s 30 and on general principles the accused is entitled as of right to cross examine the prosecution witnesses (in commitment proceedings) Hence the evidence of prosecution witnesses recorded without the accused being allowed to cross examine them is not duly recorded and cannot be introduced into the record under this section¹¹ But where the accused has declined to cross examine the prosecution witnesses in spite of opportunity being given to him to do so the absence of cross-examination by him does not affect the admissibility of the evidence under this section³

The section requires also that the evidence in the committing Magistrate's Court should have been recorded in the presence of the accused. Hence, evidence recorded in the absence of the accused cannot be admitted under this section⁴

See also the undermentioned case⁵

4 "Under Chapter XVIII." — This section applies only to the evidence of a witness recorded under Chap XVIII. The statement of a witness made on any other occasion is not within the section¹

Prior to the amendment of 1923 the words before the committing Magistrate occurred in the section in the place of the words under Chap XVIII. The amendment makes it clear that evidence recorded under Chap XVIII falls within the section although it is not recorded with a view to commitment. Thus evidence recorded under S 219 after commitment, would fall within the section²

There is no special procedure provided for the recording of evidence under Chap XVIII. Hence the evidence recorded by a Magistrate in a case which he starts with a view to trial by himself but which he subsequently decides to commit to the sessions can be held to be evidence recorded under Chap XVIII³

5. "Discretion of the presiding Judge." — The section leaves it to the discretion of the presiding Judge whether or not to admit the evidence referred to in it.¹ But the power being one in derogation of the general principle that a Court can only act on the evidence given before it (see definition of evidence in the Evidence Act, s 3), the decision to let in the previous deposition of a witness under this section should be arrived at after careful consideration and only where there are sound and reasonable grounds for such a decision.² The desire to expedite the trial or the fact that the counsel for both the sides have agreed to this course, is not a sufficient reason for acting under the section.³ The power should be confined to cases where the Judge has reason to think that a witness has deposed truly before the committing Magistrate but is not telling the truth before himself and that it is desirable in the interests of justice that the previous deposition of the witness should be brought on the record of the trial.⁴ But the Judge will be not justified in exercising his power under this section where there are only minor discrepancies between statements made before the committing Magistrate and before himself⁶ When the witness alleges that his statement before the committing Magistrate was the result of improper influence or pressure the Sessions Judge should investigate into the truth of his allegation before coming to the conclusion that his deposition in the Sessions Court (which contradicts that in the committing Magistrate's Court) is false⁶ See also Note 7

6. "If such witness is produced and examined" — It is a condition precedent to the incorporation of the previous deposition of a witness under this section that he should be produced and examined as a witness at the sessions trial¹ The examination contemplated is examination of the witness in the ordinary way Hence mere cross examination of a witness or merely tendering a witness for cross examination is not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section in this respect² So also the mere examination of a witness as to the fact of his having made the previous deposition is not enough for allowing action under this section³

7 May be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act — By force of this expression the previous deposition of a witness admitted under this section can be treated as substantive evidence in the case and not merely as evidence useful for the purpose of corroborating or contradicting a witness¹ The words for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian

Evidence Act, 1872" did not occur in the section as it stood prior to the amendment of 1923. Hence, the view taken in some of the decisions prior to the said amendment that the evidence admitted under this section could only be used for the purpose of corroboration or contradiction of a witness and not as a substantive evidence³ is now no longer law.

The words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act" do not mean that the previous statements of a witness admitted under this section can be treated as evidence only in those cases in which such a course is expressly provided for by the Evidence Act³. Nor does the expression mean that the prior depositions can be used as evidence in every case in which there is no express provision in the Evidence Act prohibiting such a course. The expression only means that the evidence admitted under this section is subject to the same rules as to admissibility and relevancy as any other evidence and that a Judge is not at liberty to admit irrelevant evidence under this section merely because it happens to be the deposition of a witness given before the committing Magistrate⁴.

As seen already, the evidence admitted under this section constitutes substantive evidence in the case quite as much as any other evidence. There is no legal objection to a conviction being based purely on the prior deposition of a witness admitted under this section.⁵ But as a matter of prudence, before preferring the evidence given before the committing Magistrate to that given before himself and acting on such evidence, a Judge should have very substantial grounds for doing so.⁶ Especially, it would be highly unsafe

Evidence Act, 1972" did not occur in the section as it stood prior to the amendment of 1923. Hence, the view taken in some of the decisions prior to the said amendment that the evidence admitted under this section could only be used for the purpose of corroboration or contradiction of a witness and not as a substantive evidence² is now no longer law.

As seen already, the evidence admitted under this section constitutes substantive evidence in the case quite as much as any other evidence. There is no legal objection to a conviction being based purely on the prior deposition of a witness admitted under this section⁶. But as a matter of prudence before preferring the evidence given before the committing Magistrate to that given before himself and acting on such evidence a Judge should have very substantial grounds for doing so⁶. Especially, it would be highly unsafe

It has been held in a number of decisions that when the evidence of a witness before the committing Magistrate is inconsistent with his evidence in the Sessions Court and it is proposed to use his previous statement under this section it is the duty of the Judge to draw his attention to his previous statement and afford him an opportunity of explaining the inconsistency between his two statements.² See Evidence Act s 145. But the correctness of this view is doubtful. The correct position seems to be that when once the deposition in the committing Magistrate's Court is admitted under this section it becomes evidence in the case for all purposes provided that in admitting the evidence before himself the committing Magistrate had not violated any provision of the Evidence Act. In this view it is incorrect to say that s 145 or s 155 of the Evidence Act governs the position and that depositions taken before the committing Magistrate which contradict the evidence given in the Sessions Court cannot be put in without putting to the witness portions of the statement with which it is sought to contradict him.³ See also Note 7.

10. Approver's evidence —The section is wide enough to include the testimony of an approver. Hence, where an approver is examined as a witness in the committing Magistrate's Court and is again examined as a witness in the Sessions Court, his evidence before the committing Magistrate can be introduced under this section into the record of the sessions case, notwithstanding that he has repudiated his former statement¹. But it would be unsafe to base a conviction on the retracted statement of an approver in the absence of any corroboration². See also S 337, Note 16.

1 Legislative changes

- (1) The corresponding S 317 of the Code of 1861 contained a single clause that the accused should be called upon to enter on his defence after the close of the prosecution evidence
- (2) The first two clauses of S 251 of the Code of 1872 contained similar provisions, clause (1) thereof corresponding to sub ss (1) and (2) and clause (2) to sub s (4) of the present section
- (3) Section 289 of the Code of 1882 was the same as the present section

2 When the examination of witnesses for prosecution is concluded —

The general principle is that an accused person is entitled to know what the evidence against him is before he is called upon to enter on his defence¹ This section accordingly provides that he is to be called upon to enter on his defence only after the examination of the prosecution witnesses is concluded² The closing of the case for the prosecution is thus not mere form but with certain exceptions closes the door to any further evidence against the accused the prosecutor cannot re open his case and make additions to it except such voluntary additions as the accused may make himself³ and except for the purpose of contradicting any new case set up by the accused in his defence⁴ If for any reason the Court re calls any prosecution witness after the accused has made his defence the accused should be given a further opportunity of calling evidence with reference to the evidence so recorded⁵ The Court should wait before proceeding under this section till all the evidence on the side of the prosecution is concluded⁶ it cannot proceed under this section in the course of the prosecution evidence because it does not believe the evidence so far tendered¹

3 After the examination, if any, of the accused — The words *if any*² would appear to suggest that the examination of the accused is not always necessary in a sessions trial. This however is not so. The words are intended to cover only those cases where the accused has no circumstances to explain, as for instance, where he has admitted his guilt and are not intended to relax the imperative provisions of S 312 in all cases³ trials⁴

Consequently before an accused person is called upon to enter on his defence he should be examined as to whether he has anything to say regarding the evidence against him⁵ even if he had been examined with great care before the committing Magistrate because it makes a considerable difference to listeners like the jurors whether a previous statement is read over to them or the accused is examined in their presence so that they may see his demeanour⁶

4 "The accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence" — After the conclusion of the prosecution evidence the Court is bound to ask the accused person if he means to adduce evidence and the accused himself cannot waive the benefit of such a provision¹. The words adduce evidence in sub s (1) do not mean the same thing as the words enter on his defence in sub s (4). It is only where at a later stage the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused person committed the offence that the accused is to be called upon to enter on his defence²

5 "The prosecutor may sum up his case" — Sub section (2) — The prosecutor may sum up his case only if the accused says he does not mean to adduce evidence. In a case where several persons are tried together the word he in sub s. (1) and (4) should be construed to apply to all the accused together and so a prosecutor may sum up only if all the accused say they do not mean to adduce evidence³

6 Where there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence — The words no evidence in sub s (2) mean merely that there is not on the record any evidence which even if true would amount to legal proof of the offence charged against the accused. They cannot be extended to mean *no satisfactory, trustworthy or conclusive evidence*¹. The real test in deciding whether there is evidence or not is to see whether a

(No evidence

Judge at a trial held with the aid of jurors could say that there was no evidence which could go before the jury.² However a mere scintilla of evidence is not enough to justify the Judge in leaving a case to the jury. There must be evidence from which they might reasonably conclude the fact to be established.³ The evidence referred to is the evidence let in on behalf of the prosecution. So where the only evidence is the confession of a co-accused⁴ or the evidence of witnesses of a co-accused⁵ it is a case of "no evidence" within the meaning of this section. The evidence contemplated by sub s (2) includes both direct and circumstantial evidence.⁶ The words "no evidence" do not however, mean absence of evidence on behalf of the prosecution owing to failure of witnesses to attend. So, where the prosecution could not adduce evidence owing to failure of witnesses to attend, the Court cannot treat it as a case of "no evidence" and proceed under this section.⁷

7. Record a finding of not guilty — If the Court considers that there is no evidence, it can, in a case tried with the aid of assessors itself record a finding of not guilty even without taking the opinions of the assessors but if there is some evidence, though not trustworthy, satisfactory or conclusive, the Court must record the opinions of assessors before recording a finding of not guilty.¹ But the Court cannot purporting to act under this section, record a finding of not guilty where it considers the charge itself improper.² Where there is no evidence the Judge should enter a verdict of acquittal there is no warrant for a finding of "not proven".³

8 "Direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty" — If in a case tried by a jury there is no legal evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court should direct the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty". It must not leave it to the jury to express their opinion since a finding of guilty by the jury under such circumstances cannot be sustained,¹ even if there is some evidence available but not called by the prosecution² The direction of a Judge that there is no evidence that the accused committed an offence is binding on the jury and must be followed by them, and where the Judge, in such a case, directs the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty," the jury must accept that opinion whether they agree with it or not; a return of verdict of guilty in such a case cannot be accepted³ The Court cannot forbear from directing a return of a verdict of not guilty if there is no evidence, even on the ground that the case of a co accused is likely to be prejudiced thereby⁴ But if there is some evidence the case must go before the jury and the Court cannot direct a verdict of not guilty because it disbelieves the evidence⁵

A Court of Session, unlike a High Court, has no power to stay proceedings under s 273 on unsustainable charges and all that it can do after hearing the evidence and coming to the conclusion that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence is to direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, but it cannot do so before the commencement of the trial This provision is meant for remedying any suspicion of injustice under which the accused may labour in respect of what he considers to be a committal on insufficient evidence⁶

9. "Shall call on the accused to enter on his defence" — Sub-section (4). — The calling upon an accused person to enter on his defence under this subsection is not a mere formality but is an essential part of a criminal trial¹ So, where there is some evidence on behalf of the prosecution which might go before a jury, the Court should call upon the accused to enter on his defence² after the close of the prosecution evidence and summing up by the prosecutor.³ As to whether a failure to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence is an irregularity covered by S 537, see Note 11

Where several persons are tried together even if one of them offers to adduce evidence all of them should be called upon to enter on their defence and they must follow one another in their defence since there cannot be a summation up only in the case of accused not adducing evidence and a right of reply as against others⁴ Since in a criminal case the burden of proof is on the prosecution and the conviction must be based on evidence which excludes the theory of innocence⁵ the accused should be called upon to enter on his defence only if the evidence is such as to enable the Court to judge rather than conjecture⁶ For the same reason no adverse inference can be drawn against the accused if he fails to adduce evidence even if he had in answer to a question under the first part of this section undertaken to adduce evidence⁷ If the accused makes any statement in his defence it ought to be recorded. If he does not voluntarily make any statement or declines to answer questions under S 342 the facts should be noted. When there is nothing else to show the nature of the defence a note of the address to the Court under S 290 if any should be recorded. The record is not complete unless it shows the nature of the defence set up⁸.

Where the accused calls no witnesses the clause means that he or his pleader is to make his final address to the Court⁹.

10 Procedure where the witnesses for the accused are absent — Where due to a mistake the witnesses for the defence were not in attendance not having been summoned by the Magistrate it was held that the trial should be adjourned and the accused should be given an opportunity to examine his witnesses by summoning them if necessary¹ after calling upon him to enter on his defence².

11 Effect of non compliance with the section. — The criminal proceedings are bad unless they are conducted in the manner prescribed by law and if they are substantially bad in themselves the defect will not be cured by any consent or waiver on the part of the accused¹. Thus it is irregular to record the prosecution evidence after the accused has entered on his defence² but it is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial if there has been no prejudice caused to the accused by reason of such irregularity³.

Where the Court records a finding of not guilty or directs the jury to return a verdict of not guilty without recording the opinions of the assessors or the verdict of the jury, as the case may be, in a case where there is enough evidence to go to the jury the Court acts without jurisdiction and the trial is illegal.⁴ But the Calcutta High Court has held under similar circumstances that it is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial if there is no prejudice to the other accused.⁵ Where there is no evidence and the jury returns a verdict of guilty by reason of the Judge not directing them to give a verdict of not guilty the conviction is bad in law.⁶ Entering upon defence on being called upon to do so marks a special stage in, and is an essential part of a criminal trial. Omission to call upon the accused to enter on his defence according to the Calcutta High Court⁷ and the Chief Court of Lower Burma⁸ cannot but occasion failure of justice and conviction consequent thereon must be set aside. But the High Courts of Allahabad⁹ and Madras¹⁰ have taken the view that it is only an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial if there has been no prejudice to the accused. Where the accused is not asked if he means to adduce evidence his conviction is liable to be set aside.¹¹

290. The accused or his pleader may then open his case stating the facts or law on which he intends to rely, and making such comments as he thinks necessary on the evidence for the prosecution. He may then examine his witnesses (if any) and after their cross examination and re examination (if any) may sum up his case.

1 Defence — The last section (S 289) provides that if after the prosecution evidence is taken in a sessions trial the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused committed the offence he should be called upon to enter on his defence. This and the next section provide for the procedure to be followed in conducting the defence.

The accused is entitled to set up any defence technical or otherwise.¹ There is no legal bar to his raising even inconsistent defences². Thus he can raise a defence of alibi as well as of private defence³. But the defence will become weaker by inconsistent pleas, being raised⁴.

The record of the trial should show the nature of the defence set up⁵. The nature of the defence is to be gathered not only from the statement of the accused but also from the trial of cross examination of the prosecution witnesses and the arguments of the defence pleader⁶.

Though under s 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proving that the case of the accused falls within one of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is on him it is not necessary that he should specifically raise such a plea. A Court is bound to give effect to a plea of private defence if it is made out on the evidence though it is not specifically raised by the accused⁷. So also in discharging this burden the accused need not establish his plea beyond a reasonable doubt. If the accused makes out a prima facie case in favour of his plea then the burden shifts to the prosecution which has still to discharge its original and major onus that never shifts i.e. that of establishing on the whole case the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt⁸.

The accused is not bound to disclose the nature of his defence in the committing Magistrate's Court⁹. Nor is he bound to disclose his defence in the Sessions Court till he is called on to enter upon his defence¹⁰. But if he means to bring any charges against the prosecution (e.g. a charge of fraud) as part of his defence there is an equitable rule that he should disclose his intention during the cross examination of the prosecution witnesses so that the prosecution may have an opportunity of explaining matters. Unless such an opportunity is given to the prosecution the defence so far as it is based on the allegations

2. Accused's right to examine witnesses—When a prisoner puts forward a distinct defence and cites witnesses but such witnesses on their appearance in Court say that they know nothing in prisoner's favour, it is the duty of the Judge, instead of dismissing them at once, to question them with a view to see if there is any truth in the defence¹

It is no part of the duty of a Judge to examine a witness for the accused when his pleader has refused to do so and the accused has not raised any objection.²

See section 291 and Notes thereon

3. Accused's right to cross-examine witnesses.—An accused is entitled to cross examine the witness of a co accused whose case is adverse to his own¹

Where a witness examined by the prosecution in the committing Magistrate's Court is given up by the prosecution and the accused thereafter calls him as his own witness, the accused cannot cross examine him the reason being that the Evidence Act gives the right of cross examination only to the adverse party except in certain cases (Evidence Act ss 138 and 151)²

4. Summing up after evidence—Right of—When there are more than one accused in a case, their pleaders should be allowed to sum up their respective cases after the evidence for all the accused has been taken¹ Any arbitrary and undue curtailment by the Court of the parties' right of argument is to be deprecated²

5. Evidence in criminal cases—The burden of proving the guilt of the accused in all criminal cases is on the prosecution¹ There is no obligation on the accused

1 Scope of the section—This section entitles the accused to examine in his defence in the Sessions Court all witnesses who are present whether they have been named by him previously or not. It also entitles him to the assistance of the Court in compelling the attendance of all those witnesses who were included by him in the list of witnesses delivered by him to the committing Magistrate under S 211. As it is a frequent ground of appeal against a conviction by the Sessions Court that the Court refused or omitted to examine witnesses for the defence the Court should be careful to note specifically in the record whether the accused elected to call any witnesses in his defence or refused to do so and whether the witnesses called by him were examined¹

2 Examination of witnesses present in Court — Under this section the accused is entitled as of right to examine as a witness in his defence any person who is present in the Court notwithstanding that he was not named by him previously as his witness¹ 4 fortiori if a witness included in the list delivered by the accused to the committing Magistrate under S 211 is present in Court the Court is bound to allow him to be examined² In the undermentioned case³ it was held that if the accused insists on the examination of a witness in attendance who had been discharged before the Court may if it thinks that the interests of justice would be served allow him to be examined

3 Right to issue of process for compelling attendance of witnesses —

This section provides that except in certain cases the accused is not entitled as of right to the issue of summons to any witness not included in the list delivered by him to the committing Magistrate under S 211 Nor can he insist on an adjournment being granted to enable him to examine any such witness¹ But it is open to the Sessions Court in the exercise of its discretion to issue summons for the attendance of such witnesses² and ordinarily an application by an accused for summons ought not to be refused if there is time to secure the attendance of the witnesses before the conclusion of the trial³

In the case of witnesses included in the list delivered by the accused to the committing Magistrate under S 211 ss 216 and 217 provide that they should be summoned to give evidence before the Sessions Court or if they have been examined before the committing Magistrate should be required to execute bonds binding themselves to give evidence in the Sessions Court If any of them fail to appear in the Sessions Court the accused is entitled as of right to the issue of process to compel their attendance⁴ or to an adjournment of the case to enable him to secure their attendance⁶ This right of the accused applies not only to the witnesses included in the list which the committing Magistrate is bound to accept under S 211, sub s (1), but also to those included in the list which he accepts in the exercise of his discretion under sub s (2) of that section⁶

But the right of the accused to issue of process is one that can be waived by him. Hence, if the accused has said that he does not wish to examine any witness but requests for process at a late stage of the case, the Court may decline to comply with his request⁷ Similarly, where the Court directs the accused to make his application for summons early but the latter delays and applies for summons at the last moment, his application may be rejected⁸ But the accused is not bound to apply for summons before he is called on to enter upon his defence⁹

Where the committing Magistrate has in the exercise of his discretion under S 211 refused to issue summons to a certain witness and the accused applies to the Sessions Court for summons to such witness the Sessions Court can issue such summons¹⁰ The Sessions Court has power under this section to recall a prosecution witness for cross examination by the accused when the accused had no opportunity of cross examining him before¹¹

1 Object of the section — The object of the Legislature in enacting this section is to give each side an opportunity to comment upon the evidence let in by the other and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecutor¹

There is no similar provision so far as the trial of warrant cases is concerned, but it has been held that even in such cases, both the prosecutor and the accused should be allowed to address arguments to the Court after the evidence is let in²

2 Prosecutor, meaning of — Section 270 provides that in every trial before a Court of Session, the prosecution shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor. The "Prosecutor" in this section therefore means the Public Prosecutor

Sections 492 and 493 provide for the appointment of Public Prosecutors, the latter also providing that if a private person instructs a pleader to prosecute in any Court any person, in any such case such pleader shall act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor. See Notes on those sections

3 "If the accused or any of the accused" — Where one of several accused persons tried jointly calls witnesses at the trial but the other accused call no witnesses, the prosecutor has the right of reply on the whole case. He is not to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence and reply on the evidence that may have been adduced by the others¹. Where, however, the accused are indicted under separate counts in the same indictment, the charges are distinct and the prosecutor has a right of reply upon that prisoner only in whose behalf evidence was called²

4 Extent of right of reply. — If any of the accused lets in oral evidence, the prosecutor is entitled to reply; such reply need not be confined to the evidence let in by such accused, but may be as against all the accused and generally on the whole case¹. Where under clause (c) of this section, only documents are put in and no oral evidence is let in on behalf of the accused, the prosecutor can only comment upon such documents, but cannot, except with the permission of the Court address on the whole case

5 Production of document in cross-examination of prosecution witness — Right of reply — Section 292 of the Code of 1892 provided that the prosecutor had a right of reply where the accused or any of the accused had stated, when asked under S 291 that he meant to adduce evidence. It was however, held by the Calcutta High Court that where the accused did not in fact adduce any evidence, there was no right of reply even though he had stated when questioned under S 289 that he meant to adduce evidence. There was also a conflict of opinions on the question whether where the accused filed documents in cross examination of the prosecution witnesses, he must be taken to have adduced evidence so as to give the prosecutor a right of reply.¹

Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923 the prosecutor had a right of reply where the accused or any of the accused adduced any evidence. This however, did not settle the conflict on the question whether the filing of a document in cross examination of the prosecution witness gave the prosecutor a right of reply.²

The present amended section has set the conflict at rest. The right of reply now depends upon the accused adducing oral evidence after the close of the prosecution case or by the production of a document after he enters on his defence. The filing of a document during the cross examination of the prosecution witness will not give the prosecutor a right of reply.³

6 Reply wrongly allowed — Effect — Where the prosecutor is wrongly allowed to reply in a case in which there is no right of reply, the irregularity is not one which will vitiate the whole proceedings or which will call for a re trial even from the stage at which the error arose.⁴

293. (1) Whenever the Court thinks that the jury or assessors should view the place in which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred, the Court shall make an order to that effect, and the jury or assessors shall be conducted in a body, under the care of an officer of the Court, to such place, which shall be shown to them by a person appointed by the Court

(2) Such officer shall not, except with the permission of the Court, suffer any other person to speak to, or hold any communication with, any of the jury or assessors, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, they shall, when the view is finished, be immediately conducted back into Court

1 Scope of the section — This section provides for the local inspection of the scene of occurrence or any other material place by the jury or assessors in sessions cases. Section 539B provides for similar inspection by Magistrates and Judges¹. See S 539B and Notes thereon

2 "Whenever the Court thinks" — It is only in cases where the Court considers that an inspection would assist the jury or the assessors in determining whether the charge is true or false that it should be ordered. Where the charge against a prisoner was that he made certain statements on oath knowing them to be false (the statement being that one M threatened to cut the tree) it was held that a local inspection as to the condition of tree was not material to the case². See also the undermentioned case³

3 Jury or assessors not to hold communication with any other person — It is imperative that the jury or assessors should not have any extra judicial knowledge of the facts in the case they are to decide the case on the legal evidence taken by the Judge. Where a Sessions Judge directed the assessors to make an inspection of the locality and also instructed them to examine witnesses if they desire to do so the High Court condemned the procedure and held that in asking the assessors to take evidence he was abdicate his own high functions⁴

294.† If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted with any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross examined and re examined in the same manner as any other witness

1 Scope and object of the section — The principle of this section is that no man shall be convicted except on evidence which he has had an opportunity of testing by cross examination and of contradicting the same by rebutting evidence¹. A juror or assessor is expected to form and give his opinion on the evidence given at the trial and not to act upon his personal knowledge of any relevant facts of the case without giving evidence of the same as a witness in the case²

Where at the end of a trial one of the assessors expresses his opinion as to the guilt of the accused basing his opinion on his own personal knowledge, without giving the evidence of the same as a witness it has been held that this expression of opinion does not necessitate a de novo trial with the aid of other assessors and that the Judge should in such a case ignore the opinion of the assessor³

Where the juror or assessor is examined as a witness he is not disqualified from acting as a juror or assessor in the case after giving his evidence⁴

Jury or assessors to attend at adjourned sitting 295. If a trial is adjourned, the jury or assessors shall attend at the adjourned sitting, and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial

1 Adjournment of sessions case — Where a sessions case is adjourned the jury or assessors are bound under this section, to attend the adjourned hearing. A failure to attend will be punishable under section 332

As to adjournments of criminal trials see Section 344

296.† The High Court may, from time to time, make rules as to locking up jury keeping the jury together during a trial before such Court lasting for more than one day, and subject to such rules, the presiding Judge may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes

1 Scope and object of the section. — This section touches on the undesirability of separation of the jury before their verdict is given¹ and empowers the High Courts to make rules for locking them up during trial. The jury are not entitled to talk to persons connected with the accused during the progress of the trial². Where one of the jurors during the trial of a case expressed his opinion outside Court as to the guilt of the accused person and made a fairly distinct intimation that he had formed an opinion to that effect it was held that when this was brought to the notice of the trial Judge a de novo trial should be ordered after discharging that jury³. The object of this section is to see that the jury comes to a conclusion in the case on the evidence adduced thereon uninfluenced by anything that may be said or done outside the Court. See also the under mentioned case⁴

F — Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried by Jury.

297: In cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the Charge to jury prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1872 —

- (1) The words "when the case for the defence and the Prosecutor's reply, if any, are concluded the Court shall proceed to charge," etc., were introduced, thereby showing the stage at which the Court should address the jury.
- (2) The words 'and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided' were also added thereby throwing on the Judge the duty of explaining the law to the jury.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1882 —

The words "A statement of the Judge's direction to the jury shall form part of the record" which occurred in the former Code were omitted.

2. Object of charge to jury. — In a trial by jury the jurors are the sole judges of all questions of fact,¹ their verdict on questions of fact cannot be set aside on

Those are matters entirely for the jury.)

The duties of the Judge in charging the jury are laid down by this section and the next but they are not exhaustive, they must be read together with numerous judicial decisions on the point.⁸

so as to be understood by the jury, his delivering the charge through another person is not improper¹

4 Charge as to part only of case—The law does not recognize intermediate verdicts of juror the Judge should address the jury on the whole case before taking their verdict he should not ask for their verdict on one issue reserving his address on other questions of fact¹

5. "When the case for the defence . . . are concluded."—The stage at which the Judge is to address the jury is when the prosecution and the defence have let in all their evidence and after the arguments if any of the prosecution and the defence a charge before that will be premature¹ It is illegal to allow the jury to pronounce their verdict before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence² After the prisoner claims to be tried all the evidence whether statements of witnesses or admissions of the prisoner, should be placed before the jury³ It is not open to a Judge after hearing some of the prosecution witnesses to ask the jury whether they wish to hear any more evidence, and on their stating that they do not believe the evidence and wish to stop the case to record a verdict of acquittal He is bound to allow the whole evidence to be placed before the jury⁴ Only in cases where under S 299 the Judge finds that there is no evidence to go to the jury can the case be withdrawn from the jury in all other cases the full facts should be placed before them and then the charge should be delivered⁵

(1) summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and

(2) laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided

Under this section the Judge is bound to sum up the evidence whether or not the jury desire him to do so¹ The summing up of the evidence is the presentation to the jury of a summary of the evidence as it appears on the negative and affirmative sides of the case² The summing up should not be in the nature of a judgment and the Judge should

Where there are a large number of important points to be discussed it is necessary that some of those points should be separated by some considerable time from the other items of the charge.⁹

The charge should be characterised by clearness, coherence¹¹ and sequence¹² and great care should be taken to place the evidence accurately and with precision.¹³ It should not be colourless and should not fail to bring before the jury the main circumstances in the case.¹⁴ It should be delivered in direct and simple language. high flown, imaginative and fanciful language¹⁵ and slang or colloquial phrases¹⁶ should be avoided. The aim of a jury trial is not a psychological examination of the mentality of jurors. It is concerned with the definite proof of a distinct offence and the use of language tending to divert the attention of the jury from the main issue to a subsidiary point should be avoided.¹⁷ As observed in Molla Khan v Emperor,¹⁸ 'It is the manner of saying it, the arrangement and structure of his charge, which will make it either of value or valueless to the jury.'

Where there is no suggestion that the summing up was open to any objection it should be assumed that the Judge directed the jury adequately and properly as to the weight of the evidence.¹⁹

Charge should not be too elaborate or too meagre — A charge should not be too summary or meagre.²⁰ As has been observed above it should sift and analyse the evidence.²¹ To say to the jury 'you have heard the evidence, do you find the accused guilty or not? is no charge at all'.²² Nor is it a sufficient compliance with the law to say that the evidence given is 'very poor evidence which standing alone amounts to nothing'.²³ The evidence given by the witnesses should be individually discussed.²⁴ On the other hand the charge should not be too elaborate.²⁵ It is sufficient if the main, salient and important points alone are placed before the jury.²⁶ In fact in a case where numerous points arise with a greater or less bearing on the main issue the Judge cannot be expected to place them all before the jury, nor is it fair to criticise every phrase in his summing up.²⁷ To charge the jury at very great length may itself be an obstacle to the jury arriving at a correct decision. They are laymen and to enable them to come to a correct decision it is necessary that essentials should be clearly brought out and not overwhelmed and obscured by too great a mass of detail.²⁸

Charge should be impartial — The summing up should be dispassionate and impartial²⁹ and should not create prejudice against the accused.³⁰ The Judge should take not make an appeal or exhortation to the jury such as 'The whole Karachi is watching you The whole commercial world is watching you' For in doing so the Judge passes beyond the limits of wise guidance or advice and introduces extraneous considerations in the charge which may not leave the jury to come freely to their conclusions⁴⁵ Where there are discrepancies in the evidence the Judge should not merely say that there are discrepancies but should point out what they are⁴⁶ It will not be proper to advise the jury to disbelieve a man who has given consistent evidence merely because there are a few minor discrepancies⁴⁷ nor is it proper to put before the jury hypothetical or speculative cases for which there is no foundation in evidence⁴⁸

But having regard to S 298 sub s (2), it is proper and reasonable for the Judge to direct the jury as to the weight to be attached to the evidence called at the trial provided that the Judge takes care to caution the jury that they are the sole judges of all questions of fact⁴⁹

After the Judge has summarised the evidence for the prosecution and the defence, he should tell the jury that though they do not believe the defence, it does not follow that they must believe the prosecution. Giving such a direction at the end of the charge will not amount to misdirection.⁶⁰

Summing up is not rendered unnecessary by reason of counsel having addressed jury — The sufficiency of a charge to the jury must depend largely upon the special circumstances of each case such as the constitution of the jury, their intelligence and education, the elaboration with which the case has been conducted, the skill of the defence and a variety of other circumstances.⁶¹ But the Judge will not be relieved of the duty of placing before the jury the important facts of the case simply because the counsel have addressed long arguments to them.⁶² It is necessary that the jury should learn from the Judge what are the important points to which their attention should be directed.⁶³

Where however, the defence was not specific but consisted in merely denying the charge coupled with destructive criticism of the prosecution evidence, it was held that it was enough if the Judge drew the attention of the jury to the discrepancies in the prosecution evidence and the criticisms advanced and that no useful purpose would be served by formally charging the jury that the defence was a denial of the prosecution case⁵⁵ that is to say, he must point out to the jury exactly the evidence against each of the accused separately, it is not sufficient if he simply asks the jury to consider the case of each accused separately.² But it has been held that where the evidence is common to all the accused and is very brief it is not necessary for the Judge to keep on repeating the same evidence in the case of each accused.³ It is a wrong method of approach to summarise the evidence against each of the accused persons and ask the jury at the end of each summary if the accused has been falsely implicated thereby putting before them a false issue which is likely to misguide them into thinking that unless they are satisfied that the case is false, they must find the accused guilty.⁴

The discussion of the evidence of individual prosecution witnesses should precede that part of the charge in which the jury is asked to consider the case as against individual accused separately.⁵

The Judge should not in his charge to the jury merely use the word 'accused' leaving the jury in considerable doubt as to which accused he refers he should make reference to each accused separately.⁶

Explanation of the law is not rendered unnecessary by the fact that counsel have addressed the jury—As has been stated in Note 6 the fact that the prosecuting and defence counsel have explained the law to the jury does not relieve the Judge of his duty in that respect. The responsibility of laying down the law for the guidance of the jury rests entirely with the Judge and it is immaterial how much or how often jury have been addressed by pleaders on both sides.²⁵ The reason for this may be stated in the words of a pronouncement of the Privy Council²⁶ Jurors are apt to be suspicious of the law as propounded by the defence they look to the Judge for an authoritative statement of it.

When the jurors state that they do not understand the law it is the duty of the Judge to explain the same to them again.²⁷

The heads of charge should also show how the law was explained to the jury. See Section 367, Note 15.

Besides explaining the particular section or sections of the Penal Code or other Acts under which the accused is charged it is the duty of the Judge to advise and direct the jury on other questions of law and procedure which may arise in the case.²⁸

(A) Charge for major offence—The Judge can direct that it is open to the jury to convict the accused of a minor offence though the charge is in respect of a major offence.²⁹

(B) Approver's evidence — Value of — The Judge should direct the jury to consider whether a particular witness in the case is or is not an accomplice.³⁰ He can

The failure to warn the jury of the danger of convicting the accused on the woman's evidence amounts to a misdirection which vitiates the trial⁶¹. Where, however, a part of the woman's evidence which is the crucial part and which, if believed, establishes the guilt of the accused is corroborated, the failure to give warning cannot be said to have affected the verdict of the jury and is therefore no ground on which the conviction should be set aside⁶².

Where a woman is alleged to be of a bad character, the Judge should point out to the jury that the alleged bad character is relevant only so far as it affects the credit of the woman or supports the defence suggestion that the crime is not a true one⁶³.

(I) Other cases of warning—The Judge should also warn the jury that the evidence of an expert should be approached with caution⁶⁵ that suggestions of flanders do not amount to evidence unless they are partly or wholly accepted by the prosecution witnesses⁶⁶ that evidence of witnesses taken under S 161 must be accepted with a great deal of caution⁶⁷ that they are not to draw an adverse inference against the accused from the fact that they were subjects of a proceeding under S 110 of the Code⁶⁸ and that they should be cautious in acting on a statement of a witness made before the committing Magistrate but deemed before the Sessions Judge⁶⁹.

However important the first information report may be either from the point of view of the prosecution or of the defence, it should not be admitted in evidence or placed before the jury unless it is admissible under one of the provisions of the Evidence Act. If however, it is admissible it should be placed before the jury with proper directions. The jury should not be told to attribute any importance to it merely because it is the fabric on which the whole prosecution case depends. Ordinarily such a report is not substantive evidence but if the first informant had died before the matter came before the Court it is admissible under S 37 (1) of the Evidence Act. In such a case the jury should be informed that the first information report is admissible as a substantive piece of evidence under that provision and at the same time they should be reminded that the statement in question had not been made on oath nor had it been tested by cross examination but that after bearing these points in mind it would be for the jury to attach to it such weight as they consider necessary. ⁹ (See also S 154 Note 10)

10 Effect of non-observance of this provision — Laying down the law — It has been held in the undernoted cases¹ that the failure of the Judge to explain properly the law to the jury is not a mere misdirection, but is a failure to comply with an express provision of law vitiating the whole trial it is a defect which cannot be cured by S 537. In other cases however it has been held that such an omission is not a material misdirection and where the offence charged is a simple one (like theft) and where the jury have understood fully the constituent factors of the offence an omission to explain the law may not of itself justify a reversal of the verdict² though where such an omission to explain the law occasions a failure of justice the verdict will be set aside³.

The cases cited below⁴ show how it is a question depending on the circumstances of each case whether the Judge has failed to lay down the law for the guidance of the jury

11. Misdirection — Sub-section (2) of s 423 provides that the verdict of a jury cannot be altered or reversed 'unless such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him. There is no definition of the word misdirection in the Code. Technically a 'misdirection' is an error of law made by a Judge in charging a jury.¹ But the expression as used in the Code includes not only an error in laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided but also a defect in summing up the evidence.² In *Sundaresa Iyer v Emperor*³ it was observed that a misdirection includes also a defect in summing up the evidence or in not summing it up or summing it up erroneously which may often prejudice the accused more than not summing it up at all. Such error and defect are in all cases an infringement of the law as laid down in s 22.⁴ A mere non-direction is not necessarily a misdirection though who alleges misdirection must show that something wrong was said or something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood.⁵

The proper way of viewing a charge by a Judge to the jury has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Channing Arnold v Emperor.⁶

A charge to a jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law in it the Court will of course be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would however not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection if upon the general view taken the case has been fairly left within the jury's province.⁶

It is not enough for the purpose of establishing a misdirection to show that the Judge might have laid much more stress than he has laid on the defects in the prosecution case⁷

The following may be given as instances of misdirection

- (1) Instead of asking the jury to find if the case has been legally proved to tell them that if they are morally convinced they may find the accused guilty⁸
- (2) Misreading or misquoting the evidence⁹ It is of the greatest importance that whatever the Judge says to the jury must be true and must be a correct representation of facts appearing from the evidence¹⁰ The Judge should not make suggestions which are absolutely without foundation on the record¹¹
- (3) Grave omissions and vague over statements¹² But the omission to mention before the jury some small items of corroborative or discrepant evidence may be comparatively unimportant particularly in a case where the jury had been addressed by advocates on each side¹³
- (4) Stressing too much on unimportant points¹⁴
- (5) Asking the jury to neglect any portion of the evidence¹⁵ or telling them that if juries were to throw up a case on account of contradictions and falsehoods there would be an end to the criminal law of the land¹⁶

12 Non direction. — As has been seen in the previous Note, non-direction is not necessarily misdirection in every case so as to vitiate the trial.¹ Where, however, the non-direction is with regard to a point of vital importance² especially when it is favourable to the accused,³ and when such non-direction has misled the jury,⁴ the trial will be held to be illegal. A mere failure on the part of the Judge to point out to the jury all the matters which may be considered by them in evidence, does not necessarily amount to misdirection.⁵ If a case is substantially put to the jury, a mere omission to refer to this or that circumstance or suggestion will not make such omission a misdirection.⁶ The test, as to whether an omission in the summing up of the Judge to the jury amounts to a misdirection or not is whether the omission, in the opinion of the appellate or revisional

13. Effect of misdirection. — Under S 423, sub s (2), a verdict of the jury can be altered or reversed only on proof of misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding of the law by the jury. But it is not every misdirection and non-direction that will be a ground for reversing the verdict of the jury. By S 537, clause (d), when the misdirection does not occasion a failure of justice, the verdict cannot be altered. So, in appeals against the verdict of a jury it must be shown (a) that there was misdirection and (b) that such misdirection resulted in a miscarriage or a failure of justice¹. The same principle will to mention that approver was caged by police at the time of his arrest about eleven weeks before confession, held did not amount to non-direction) apply with regard to a non-direction² What is miscarriage of justice should be judged from the facts and circumstances of each case. In the undermentioned Allahabad cases³ the Court remarked that a "miscarriage of justice through misdirection means that there must be a reasonable ground for apprehending that the misdirection may have affected the jury's verdict" It has not been interpreted to mean that the appellate Court must find before setting aside a verdict that the accused was entitled to an acquittal on the evidence. If this were so, there is no object in ordering a new trial It means that there must be a reasonable ground for apprehending that, but for the misdirection, the jury may have arrived at a different verdict,⁴ or putting it in another way, "whether in spite of the misdirection the conviction and verdict are not justified in law, as they stand," and if they are justified there is no failure of justice⁵ Where the appellate Court finds that there is misdirection, it can under S 423 either acquit the accused setting aside the verdict, or reduce the sentence, or order a new trial with a fresh jury⁶ In trials by the High Court Se - ons,

Duty of Judge

298. (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge —

- (a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove, and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties, and, in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties,
- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial,
- (c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given,
- (d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury, and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors

(2) The Judge may, if he thinks proper, in the course of his summing up, express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact, or upon any question of mixed law and fact, relevant to the proceeding

Illustrations

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible

It is for the Judge and not for the jury to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed

‘It is, in my judgment, clearly open to the Court to consider, not so much what effect the misdirection has upon the minds of this Court sitting in place of a jury but what the effect of the misdirection was or may have been upon the minds of the jury which tried the case, and in so doing we must, I think, assume that the jury was a reasonably competent jury, though we must remember that a jury consists of laymen, and that a misdirection may have more effect upon the minds of laymen than upon the mind of a trained Judge”

15 Record of charge to jury. — See Note 15 on S 367

16. Effect of a juror not understanding the charge. — Where one of the jurors is unacquainted with the language in which the charge is made and so is unable to follow it, it has been held by the Privy Council that the whole trial is vitiated.¹ See also S. 278 Note 3.

17. Effect of a bad charge. — Where a charge is inadequate and insufficient and it does not assist the jury to exercise their function as jurors or place before them clearly the issues to be decided, the whole trial will be bad.¹ But the question in each case would be whether there was a failure of justice consequent on such bad charge.² See also Note 13

18 When Judge can re-charge the jury. — In cases where the jury returns an unintelligible verdict the Judge instead of asking questions under S 303 may again sum up the case to them and direct them to give a fresh verdict¹ But the Judge cannot re charge the jury and ask them to return a fresh verdict merely because he disagrees with their first verdict² See also section 303 Note 5

298.* (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge —

- (a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove, and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties, and, in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties,
- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial;
- (c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given,
- (d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury, and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors.

(2) The Judge may, if he thinks proper, in the course of his summing up, express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact, or upon any question of mixed law and fact, relevant to the proceeding

Illustrations

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible

It is for the Judge, and not for the jury, to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed

1. Scope and object of the section. — This section and the next specify the duties of the Judge and the jury respectively¹ and embody the general principle that the question what the jury are to receive is for the Judge and what they are to believe is for the jury, in other words, the question whether there is any evidence is for the Judge whether there is sufficient evidence is for the jury² (See also s 269)

The provisions of this section show that the Judge should evince an interest in the case even from its beginning³

2 "Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial" — The decision on all questions of law arising in the course of the trial is solely for the Judge¹ whose direction thereon is absolute and binding on the jury² In other words the jury is to take the law from the Judge³

The following questions are for the Judge

- (1) Whether, when an adult woman had consented to sexual intercourse it would be an offence of rape within the meaning of the Penal Code⁴
- (2) In a case of defamation whether the imputation found to have been made and the harm found to have been the probable or expected result were such as to satisfy the definition of the offence of defamation⁵
- (3) Whether a particular communication is a privileged one or not⁶

 - (5) It has been held in the case noted below⁸ that the Judge may say that a certain prosecution witness is an accomplice. The Chief Court of Oudh has also taken a similar view¹⁰
 - (6) Whether there is corroboration¹¹
 - (7) Whether a witness is capable of testifying as a witness though after the Judge has decided in favour of his competency it is for the jury to decide on the amount of credit to be given to such a witness¹². In introducing evidence in a trial with the aid of a jury, the Judge should be very careful to see that there is no miscarriage of justice² He should decide about the admissibility as and when the question arises and should, if the evidence is inadmissible, shut it out from the jury³ The moment to decide the question of admissibility is when the evidence is sought to be admitted⁴ If inadmissible evidence is once let in, any later exhortation to the jury to ignore that will be insufficient (see Note 11 on S 297) It is always desirable that the jury should be asked to retire from the Court when the question as to the admissibility of a particular piece of evidence is being discussed⁵ The Judge should decide that a confession is voluntary before admitting it and placing it before the jury,⁶ although such a question is one of fact The reason is that all facts preliminary to the admissibility of evidence are for the Court⁷ (See cl (c) and Note 8) The Judge is not concerned with the truth of the confession, even if he is satisfied that it is true, but if its voluntary nature is doubted then the Judge should exclude it under the law⁸ When the Judge has decided on its admissibility, it is for the jury to see whether it is true and can be relied upon, and one test which they will apply is whether it appears to them to have been freely and voluntarily made⁹

See also the undermentioned cases¹⁰ Similarly, the Judge has to see if the confession is vitiated by any other circumstance mentioned in ss. 24, 25, etc., of the Evidence Act¹¹ He should never leave it to the jury to decide about the admissibility of the confession¹² Where a Judge admits a first information report into evidence he should leave the matter entirely free to the jury as to what weight they should attach to it It is not proper for him to give his reasons for admitting the document He should merely state that he admits the document in evidence and should lay it before the jury¹³

The Judge should see that witnesses depose before the jury the facts known to them, it is irregular to read their deposition in the prior trial and ask them if it is true See also the undermentioned case¹⁴ where the advantage of the jury hearing the evidence as it is deposed to by the witnesses before them is pointed out

See also the undermentioned decision¹⁵ as to whether a Judge's admission of evidence amounts to a decision within the meaning of Letters Patent clause 26 Where certain evidence is wrongly admitted but the course of the trial is not in any way deflected thereby it would form no ground on which an application under clause 39 of the Letters Patent (Rangoon) can be based¹⁶

4 'Propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties' — See ss 148 to 157 of the Evidence Act The Judge should control the examination in chief by the prosecution and allow only legal questions to be put in a legal way¹ Similarly it is his duty to control the cross examination in such a way as to disallow any question which is improper or misleading²

5 "To prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties" — An erroneous omission on the part of the parties to object to the admissibility of a piece of evidence will not render it admissible; otherwise it is not¹ This section, therefore provides that the Judge may prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties²

In *Abbas Peada v Queen Empress*³ then Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observed

"This is a wise provision of the law, because in many of these cases tried in the Sessions Court by a jury, sometimes the prisoners are not defended at all and sometimes defended by persons not fully qualified for their work. It is therefore the duty of the Judge to see that evidence, which is not admissible in itself should not be allowed to go in to the prejudice of the accused

The fact that the accused puts forward some particular ground for holding that certain evidence is not admissible does not relieve the Judge of his duty to look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether the evidence is admissible or not⁴ If by accident such inadmissible evidence is let in the Judge must distinctly tell the jury to guard themselves from being influenced by it⁵ It is impossible, however, to say even in such cases that the minds of the jury were not affected in any way by the admission of inadmissible evidence⁶ Where such admission has been prejudicial to the accused the trial will be vitiated⁷

6 "In his discretion"—It is difficult to understand the object of these words in this section. Granted that a piece of the evidence which is about to be let in is inadmissible under law it is impossible to say that the Judge can have a discretion to allow its admission or not. The judicial decisions under this section have in fact held that it is the duty of the Judge to prevent inadmissible evidence going in

7 Construction of documents—Clause (b) —It is the duty of the Judge to decide upon the meaning and construction of all the documents given in evidence¹ He will be in error if he leaves the legal construction of a letter or other document to the jury² See also the unmentioned case³

8 "To decide upon all matters . . . to enable evidence of particular matters to be given" — Clause (c) — This clause refers only to a finding on a question of fact which it is necessary to prove to make other evidence admissible¹ Thus, the question whether an accused person was in police custody while making a confession is to be decided by the Judge² Similarly the Court has to find the preliminary facts before admitting secondary evidence or statements under s 32 sub s (1) or s 33 of the Evidence Act³ But where an approver whose pardon has been revoked is tried for the offence as provided for under s 339 and where under that section he pleads that he has complied with the conditions of the pardon the question whether he has forfeited the pardon is one for the jury and not for the Judge⁴

The Judge should always first decide the preliminary point on which the admissibility of other evidence depends. It is always dangerous to give in advance evidence the admissibility of which depends on what other witnesses may say⁵

The Judge has ample powers under s 165 of the Evidence Act to put any question to the witness or to examine any witness⁶

As to the duty of the Judge to decide about the voluntary character of a confession, see Note 8

9 When and how far a Judge may give his opinion on question of fact—Sub-section (2) — It is within the competence of a Judge in charging the jury to express his own opinion on facts and make his own suggestions on any points raised. It is for the jury to accept or reject the view of the Judge¹ In many cases it is not merely permissible but also desirable that the Judge should tell the jury what view he has taken of the facts in order to enable them to consider the facts properly and arrive at their own decision on them² The jurors have no experience in the matter of sifting evidence and weighing probabilities and consequently stand in need of intelligent guidance from the Judge³ It is, therefore, necessary that all help should be given to them⁴ It has been held that a charge which succeeds in avoiding any expression of opinion by Judge is the most colourless and unhelpful one,⁵ and in a recent case it was observed that if a Judge with all his advantages forms a definite and strong opinion that the evidence is not sufficient for a conviction it is dangerous to leave the matter to the jury without a strong indication of such opinion⁶

In so expressing his opinion the Judge should remember that the jury are the final judges of fact The Judge should, in cases where he expresses his opinion, tell the jury in the clearest terms that the responsibility for the decision is theirs and that they have to make up their minds themselves and that they need not rely on any opinion of his on the facts He must warn them that his opinion is not binding on them⁷ This warning should not be given in a formal way either at the beginning or at the end of the charge, but should be given at the moment when the Judge has forcibly or otherwise expressed his opinion to the jury,⁸ though it must be remembered that in the course of a lengthy charge the Judge cannot be expected to pause always to assure the jury that the matters of fact are matters for them.⁹ In a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh¹⁰ Stuart, C. J., observed

'If the Judge attempts to take the case out of the jury's province by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon the jury, it is a case of misdirection, but if a Judge simply states the opinion which the law allows him to state, in such a manner that intelligent jurymen should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else it is not necessary for him to add as a safeguard a remark that it is only his opinion and that the jury are perfectly at liberty to form their own

The Judge should not usurp the functions of the jury but should allow them to give a finding and for that purpose should present the case to the jury in a dispassionate and impartial manner.¹¹ He should not sum up in too strong and unqualified terms or give a decided opinion on the case,¹² he should not thrust his own opinion on them so as to dictate to them their verdicts¹³ nor should he be dogmatic in his expression of the opinion¹⁴

Duty of jury

299. It is the duty of the jury —

- (a) to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which under such view ought, according to the direction of the Judge, to be returned;
- (b) to determine the meaning of all technical terms (other than terms of law) and words used in an unusual sense which it may be necessary to determine, whether such words occur in documents or not,
- (c) to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact,
- (d) to decide whether general indefinite expressions do or do not apply to particular cases, unless such expressions refer to legal procedure or unless their meaning is ascertained by law, in either of which cases it is the duty of the Judge to decide their meaning

It is the duty of the jury to decide which view of the facts is true and to return a verdict in accordance with the direction of the Judge, whether that direction is right or wrong, and whether they do or do not agree with it.

(b) The question is whether a person entertained a reasonable belief on a particular point—whether work was done with reasonable skill or due diligence

Each of these is a question for the jury

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in 1882 —

- (1) The words "(other than terms of law)" were newly added
- (2) The words "declared by the Indian Penal Code or by any other law to be questions of fact" were replaced by the words "which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact"

2 Duties of the Judge and jury respectively. — The different duties of the Judge and the jury are made clear in ss 297, 298 and in this section. Shortly stated, it is the duty of the Judge to lay down the law and it is the duty of the jury to decide which view of the facts is true, in accordance with the directions of the Judge on the questions of law¹. It is not the province of the Judge to decide upon the facts except in cases coming under cl (c), S 298 (1). Nor is it the province of the jury to decide questions of law². It is for the Judge to give direction to the jury on the following questions

6. Illustration (a) to the section.—It is not in every case of murder that the Judge should point out to the jury the difference between murder and culpable homicide, where in a trial for murder a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder cannot properly be come to, under any aspect of the case before the Court the Judge is not called upon to explain the distinction between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder¹

300. In cases tried by jury, after the Judge has finished his charge, Retirement to consider the jury may retire to consider their verdict.

Except with the leave of the Court, no person other than a juror shall speak to or hold any communication with, any member of such jury.

Synopsis

- 1 Retirement to consider verdict
- 2 Prohibition of communication with non-jurors.

1. Retirement to consider verdict.—After the Judge has finished his charge, the jury may retire to the jury room immediately. The section does not contemplate that the jury should be allowed to disperse and then re-assemble in the jury room to consider their verdict. Hence, where owing to the indisposition of the foreman of the jury, the jurors were allowed to disperse for a few hours and then they returned to the Court and considered and delivered their verdict, it was held that the procedure was illegal¹

The jury must not separate until they have considered and delivered their verdict. They should all be in the retiring room together during the whole of the time between the moment of their retirement and the moment when their verdict is taken by the presiding Judge. Hence, where out of nine members who constituted the jury, five first came out of the jury-room and sat in the Court but the remaining four stayed in the jury room for half an hour more when they came and sat in the Court and the foreman delivered the verdict, it was held that the verdict was vitiated.²

In considering their verdict, the jury ought to be guided, on questions of law, by the directions of the presiding Judge. They are not entitled to consult a commentary on the law during their deliberation³

When the verdict is attacked on the ground of anything that happened in the jury-room while the jurors were considering their verdict, it is not desirable to receive in evidence the statements of individual jurors in order to impeach the verdict⁴

2. Prohibition of communication with non-jurors —The second paragraph of the section prohibits non jurors from speaking to or holding any communication with the jurors without the leave of the Court before they have delivered their verdict. If it is proved that a non juror communicated with a member of the jury contrary to this provision, it is sufficient to upset the verdict and it is not necessary to enquire into the nature of the communication held with the juror¹. Hence, proper precautions must be taken by the Sessions Judge to see that no non juror holds any communication with the jurors when they have retired to consider their verdict². But where a juror addressed to a police officer a casual remark unconnected with the case and the police officer made no reply, it was held that the provisions of the section were not infringed³. Similarly, the mere presence of a police officer in the jury room does not vitiate the verdict unless it is shown that he spoke to or held any communication with any of the jurors⁴. But it is undesirable to post a police officer in the jury room or at any place from where he can hear the deliberations of the jury.⁵

The section does not prohibit the Judge from giving fresh directions to the jury if the latter require such directions for correctly understanding the case. Fresh directions should, however, be given in open Court and not in chambers.⁶ In a sessions trial by the High Court, the Clerk of the Crown can be sent to the jury room to enquire if the jury require further assistance from the Judge.⁷

The prohibition contained in this section does not in terms apply to stages of the trial before the Judge has finished his charge to the jury. Hence, where during an adjournment of the case before the Judges charge to the jury was finished, one of the jurors was seen conversing with a non juror but the fact was not brought to the notice of the Court then and there the High Court in appeal refused to interfere with the verdict of the jury.⁸ But it is highly undesirable that jurors should have communication with non jurors upon the subject of a pending trial.⁹ Hence, where before the Judge had summed up his case, one of the jurors, in a room occupied by the clerks of pleaders in answer to questions put to him said that in his opinion the accused was guilty of the charge, it was held that there should be a fresh trial before a fresh jury.¹⁰ See also the undermentioned cases.¹¹ See also sections 282 and 296 and Notes thereon.

1 Delivery of verdict — By verdict should be understood the collective opinion of the jury as a body, arrived at after mutual consultation and ascertained and announced by the foreman¹ A recommendation made by the jurors in the verdict is however, not a part of the verdict² In cases where an accused person is tried for various offences arising out of a single act or series of acts the word verdict means the entire verdict on all the charges and is not limited to the verdict on a particular charge³

As said already, the verdict is the opinion of the jury as a body⁴ In case of disagreement, the individual opinions of the members of the jury should never be disclosed and the Judge commits an irregularity in recording the individual opinions of the jurors⁵

The jury must return a verdict on all the charges on which an accused is tried see S 303 Where there are several accused persons in a case, the jury must return a verdict as against each⁶ Where there are several charges it would be a convenient course to follow to take the verdict of the jury upon each charge separately this would obviate the difficulty in ascertaining what their verdict is on the various charges⁷ A verdict that the jury gave the accused the benefit of doubt is not a verdict according to law although such a verdict is often returned A verdict of "not guilty" covers every condition from mere hesitating doubt to conviction of innocence⁸ But it is a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a verdict of 'not guilty' as not fully establishing the innocence of the person to whom it relates⁹ Mere repugnancy in a verdict is not sufficient to quash a

Where, after delivering the verdict the foreman attempted to add something and the Judge stopped him from doing so, it was held that it was not proper to stop the jury at such a stage because it may so happen that before the verdict is recorded the foreman of the jury may make some observations in respect of that verdict which may show that the jury have not properly understood the case, in which case it would be necessary to re-charge the jury so as to lay the case properly before them¹¹ See also Notes on Ss. 302 and 303

There is no particular form in which the jury are to deliver their verdict¹² The mere fact that the jury add to their verdict their finding on the facts on which the verdict is based does not vitiate the verdict¹³

2 Verdict as to offence not specifically charged — Sections 23¹ and 235 lay down the circumstances under which an accused person who is charged with one offence can be convicted of a different offence though not specifically charged with it. The principle of these sections applies also to the verdict of a jury and the jury can return a verdict of guilty in respect of an offence different from that specifically charged against the accused provided the circumstances of the case fall within the purview of these sections. Thus, where on a charge of murder the jury finds that the accused was deprived of his self control by grave and sudden provocation, they can return a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder¹ (see S 238) Similarly on a charge of rape the jury can return a verdict of attempt to commit rape (S 238)² On a charge of dacoity the jury can return a verdict of theft (S 238)³ or of abetment of dacoity or robbery (S 237)⁴ On a charge under S 149 read with S 325 Penal Code, it is open to the jury, if it disbelieves the evidence as to the unlawful assembly, to convict the accused under S 305 alone though there was no separate charge under that section⁵ See also the undermentioned cases⁶

3 Special verdict — A special verdict is one where the jury merely state certain facts as proved and leave it to the Judge to draw the legal inference from them¹ Such a verdict is recognised as a proper verdict under the English law² But there is a conflict of decisions as to whether a special verdict would be a legal verdict under the Code On the one hand it has been held by the Bombay High Court that a special verdict would be a legal verdict under the Code³ The High Court of Calcutta is inclined to the same view⁴ On the other hand the Madras High Court has held that such a verdict is not a legal verdict⁵

In dealing with special verdicts a Judge is confined to the facts positively stated in the verdict and cannot himself supply by intendment or implication any defect in the statement⁶ But if the special verdict is ambiguous or incomplete it is open to him to question the jury under S 303 and have their verdict supplemented⁷

4. Verdict arrived at by casting lots — As seen in Note 1 the verdict of a jury is the collective opinion of the jury as a body arrived at after mutual consultation and ascertained and announced by the foreman Hence a verdict arrived at by casting lots among the jurors would not be legal But the sworn statement of a juror is not admissible for the purpose of showing that a verdict was arrived at by casting lots¹

302.* If the jury are not unanimous, the Judge may require them to retire for further consideration. After such a period as the Judge considers reasonable, the jury may deliver their verdict, although they are not unanimous

1 Scope of the section — This section empowers the Judge when the jury are not unanimous in their verdict to require them to retire for further consideration.¹ Hence when the jury differ in their opinion, the proper course for the Judge is to direct them under this section to re consider their verdict.² But the section is intended to be applied as soon as the Judge ascertains that there is a difference of opinion among the jurors and before the verdict is delivered. The section does not apply to cases where the verdict has actually been delivered.³ When directing the jury to re consider their verdict under this section it is open to the Judge to give them fresh directions on matters of law.⁴

If the jury are unanimous their verdict must be received unless it is contrary to law.⁵ Hence where the verdict is ambiguous the proper procedure is to question the jury under s 303 and clear up the matter and not to direct the jury to re consider the verdict.⁶ But where the verdict is not in accordance with the law⁷ or where from the observations of the foreman of the jury it is clear that the jury have not understood the case,⁸ the Judge can give them fresh directions and ask them to retire for further consideration of the verdict.

1 Verdict to be on all the charges — Where there are several charges against an accused and evidence has been heard on all the charges the jury should submit a verdict on all the charges¹ A failure to give a verdict on one of the charges framed does not, however amount to an acquittal on that charge and the accused can be ordered to be re tried again on the charge on which the verdict was silent²

2 Form of verdict. — The law does not prescribe any special form in which the jury are to return their verdict They are at liberty to deliver it in any form they like and if that finding is not exhaustive as to the facts in issue which go to make up the charge it is the duty of the Judge to put such questions as shall elicit a complete finding¹ In a trial for an offence under s 408 Penal Code in respect of a gross sum said to have been misappropriated within a year and composed of more than three items, the proper form in which the verdict should be given is a verdict in respect of an offence under s 408 and not in respect of each of the items alleged to be misappropriated²

3. "May ask them such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is" — It is not open to the Judge to make surmises or conjectures as to what is the verdict of the jury¹ A Judge is therefore, empowered to put questions to the jury where they are necessary to ascertain *what their verdict is*² It is only in cases where the jury have failed to return a complete verdict on all the charges or heads of charge³ or the verdict returned is ambiguous and not clear⁴ that the Judge may ask questions in order to find out what exactly the verdict is. Thus, where the verdict is not exhaustive as to the facts in issue which go to make up the charge or charges, it is competent to the Judge to ask questions so as to elicit a complete finding⁵. Similarly, where the jury return a verdict of guilty of an offence under S 304, Penal Code, the Judge can ask questions for the purpose of finding out under which part of the section they find the accused guilty⁶. So also, where, in a charge of murder the verdict was "guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation, the Judge can ask questions under this section for the purpose of ascertaining if the provocation was sufficient to destroy self control⁷. Likewise, where in a charge under S 326 Penal Code, the jury returned a verdict of "guilty but not voluntarily the Judge can ask the jury to explain their verdict inasmuch as voluntariness of the act is the gist of the offence under that section⁸. Where the jury return a verdict of not guilty of culpable homicide it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to require the jury to find expressly whether or not any minor offence had been committed⁹. Where in a trial under S 459B Penal Code for uttering forged notes, the jury returns a verdict that the accused uttered the notes the Judge should ascertain from the jury their opinion as to whether the said notes had been uttered with the knowledge of their being forged¹⁰. In a trial under S 306 Penal Code, it is the duty of the Judge to put a specific question to the jury as to the conclusion they have come to in relation to the age of the girl whose maltreatment has been the subject of the charge¹¹.

Judge is bound to accept the same¹² or if he disagrees with it to make a reference to the High Court under s 307¹³. He has no power to ask questions of the jury¹⁴ as to their reasons for the verdict¹⁵. As to whether for the purpose of making a reference under s 307 the Judge can question the jury as to their reasons for the verdict see s 307 Note 13.

The mere fact that the jury were unable to give reasons for their verdict cannot be held to show that they had no adequate reasons for their verdict¹⁶.

4 Questions and answers to be recorded — A Judge who does not record the questions put to the jury and their answers thereto but gives only a substance of the result cannot be deemed to have complied with the direction of law under this section¹. The provisions of this and the next section imply that the jury are cognizant of the record as made by the Judge of the questions put to them and answers given by them. It is extremely desirable that such record should be immediately read over to the jury and this should always be done². The omission to record the verdict of the jury in the terms prescribed by the Code is not however such an irregularity as requires the trial to be quashed and a new one to be ordered³.

5 Re-consideration of the verdict — Where the jury have delivered a clear and legal verdict the Judge cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict if he disagrees.

with the verdict he should act under S 307¹. Thus, where in a case of robbery the jury disbelieving the evidence as to the use of force gave a verdict of guilty of theft only, it was held that such a finding was not contrary to law and that the Judge could not direct a reconsideration of the verdict². Similarly, where the jury returned a verdict of guilty under S 325, Penal Code, although it was not the subject of a separate charge but was entered in a charge coupled with S 149 of that Code, it was held that the verdict was according to law and that the Judge could not direct reconsideration of the verdict³.

But where there is no legal verdict at all⁴ or where the verdict is silent on a particular part of the case, as where the foreman replies that they have not considered a particular part of the case as to which the Judge wanted their opinion,⁵ they can be sent back to reconsider the verdict. In the case of an obviously and admittedly inconsistent verdict, the Judge can make a further charge to the jury instead of referring the case to the High Court under S 307⁶. So also, where in a trial for murder the jury at first stated that their unanimous verdict was 'guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder' and the Judge, in order to ascertain which degree of the offence the jury intended, asked them questions and from their answers found that they were in doubt as to what they meant and sent them back to reconsider their verdict, it was held that until the jury had intimated under which part of S 304, Penal Code, their verdict fell, there was no complete verdict capable of being accepted and recorded, that their subsequent answers showed that they had come to no unanimous verdict and that it was the duty of the Judge to send them back for further consideration of their verdict⁷.

1 Grounds for amendment. — A verdict can be amended by the jury only where by accident or mistake a wrong verdict is delivered. corrected only under S 307 by a reference to the High Court¹ Similarly where the jury delivered a verdict of not guilty of murder but guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and the Judge asked them under what part of S 301 Penal Code they found the accused guilty, it was held that the jury could not review their former verdict or amend it unless by mistake or accident a wrong verdict had been delivered² So also where the jury delivered a unanimous verdict of not guilty but in answer to some questions by the Judge they said that they had been misled by the notes of their foreman and wanted to reconsider their verdict it was held that the verdict could not be said to have been delivered by accident or mistake and could not be amended under this section³

But where there has been no legal verdict at all as where the jury gave a verdict to the effect we have no doubt that the accused killed the deceased we think that the deceased gave no provocation but we do not think it murder because the prisoner had no object in killing the jury could be asked to reconsider their verdict⁴ It has also been held that the Judge will not be acting wrongly in asking the jury to reconsider their verdict where it is absurd or confused or not clear and definite⁵

All the evidence on both sides should be concluded before the case can be submitted to the jury There is no power in the Judge to present a case to the jury subject to any conditions and once they deliver the verdict they cannot reconsider the same except under this section Thus, where a Judge presented a case to the jury before the defence evidence was heard and they gave a verdict of guilty and then further defence evidence was taken and the jury submitted a fresh verdict it was held that the second verdict was a nullity and the judgment thereon was without jurisdiction⁶

Even after formally delivering the verdict the jury ought to be allowed if they wish to do so to say immediately after their verdict what they had in their mind in order that the delivery of the verdict may be complete⁷

2 Time for amendment — This section provides for an amendment of a wrong verdict but it clearly contemplates that such a verdict can be amended only before or immediately after it is recorded in other words before the jurors have left the Court and while they are still under the observance of the presiding Judge¹ Where the foreman publicly announced the verdict as the unanimous verdict of all the members in the hearing of all and without any dissent on the part of any of them and the verdict was recorded and the accused acquitted the Court refused to set aside the verdict when it was learnt some days after that the verdict was not the unanimous verdict of the jury.²

3 Final verdict to stand — Where there is some uncertainty in the minds of the jury the Judge can question them. In such a case there is no verdict delivered and there could be no verdict formally recorded until the last of the questions has been answered¹ and it is the verdict as ultimately amended that should stand. An amendment of the charge under S 27 can be made at any time till the final verdict of the jury in this sense is returned.² See also S 227 Note 6

305. (1) When in a case tried before a High Court the jury are

Verdict in High Court unanimous in their opinion, or when as many as six are when to prevail of one opinion and the Judge agrees with them, the Judge shall give judgment in accordance with such opinion

(2) When in any such case the jury are satisfied that they will not be unanimous, but six of them are of one opinion, the foreman shall so inform the Judge.

Discharge of jury in other cases (3) If the Judge disagrees with the majority, he shall at once discharge the jury

(4) If there are not so many as six who agree in opinion, the Judge shall, after the lapse of such time as he thinks reasonable, discharge the jury

1. Scope of the section — Under this section if the jury return a unanimous verdict the Judge must pass judgment in accordance with it, whether or not he agrees with the opinion of the jury.¹ If the jury are not unanimous but six of them are of one opinion and the Judge agrees with them such opinion has the same legal force as a unanimous verdict of the jury and the Judge must pass judgment in accordance therewith.² When the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority of the jury under sub s (3) it is competent to him to express his view as to the innocence or guilt of the accused.³ When the verdict of the jury is a majority verdict of only five to four it is ineffective either to acquit or convict the accused even if the Judge agrees with the verdict.⁴ In such cases the Judge shall discharge the jury under sub s (4)

As to the procedure to be adopted when the Judge discharges the jury under this section see S 308

Verdict in Court Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement of Session when to prevail with the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors, he shall give judgment accordingly.

1 Legislative changes — The words "unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of S 562" were added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act 18 (XXIII) of 1973.

2 Verdict to prevail where Judge does not disagree with it — In a trial by jury the position of a Judge in India differs from that of a Judge in England who is merely an instrument for passing a sentence or directing a release once a verdict is given. In India the Judge must under this section and the next *make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict*¹ and the duty of deciding whether the verdict is to be accepted or not lies upon him alone². In the former case he should act under this section and in the latter case under the next section³. This does not mean that whenever he disagrees with the verdict he is bound to make a reference to the High Court. He must be of opinion that it is necessary in the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court⁴. The Judge may disagree with the verdict and yet not think it necessary to express disagreement and in such a case this section requires that he shall accept the verdict⁵.

Where the Sessions Judge does not think it necessary to express disagreement it would be proper for him not to advertise the fact of his disagreement as it would be unnecessary and irrelevant⁶. He cannot record evidence in the absence of the jury and rely on it for the purpose of determining whether or not he should disagree with the verdict⁷.

The Judge has no power to control the jury and direct them to give a specified verdict. It is for the jury alone to convict or acquit the accused as they think proper⁸ and where the verdict entirely depends on oral evidence weight should be attached to the verdict of the jury whose function it is to decide the questions of fact⁹.

1. Scope and object of the section. — This section provides for a reference to the High Court, in cases tried by jury, where the Judge —

(1) disagrees with the verdict, and

(2) is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court¹

If these two factors are in the mind of the Judge when he makes the reference, a misdirection in the charge to the jury does not render the reference incompetent²

A Judge in this country is not, like a Judge in an English Court, an instrument for passing a sentence or directing a release once the verdict is given (compare provisions of S 303, in regard to Sessions trials in High Court), he must make up his mind whether he agrees or disagrees with the verdict, and, in the latter case, he must form an opinion whether in the interests of justice it is necessary to submit the case to the High Court³. To this extent the matter may be said to be in the discretion of the Court. But where the two conditions are satisfied, the section requires that the Judge shall make the reference, the reference is no longer a matter of discretion, but is one of *obligation*⁴. The object of the section is really to provide a safeguard, in trials by jury, against possible miscarriage of justice⁵

Where the Judge either does not disagree with the verdict or is not clearly of opinion that it is necessary in the ends of justice to make the reference, he is neither bound⁶ nor entitled⁷ to submit the case to the High Court under this section. Where a reference is made in such cases, the High Court will not act on it or interfere with the verdict on the basis of such reference.⁸

Where no reference is made by the Sessions Judge under this section the High Court cannot interfere with the verdict of the jury⁹ unless it is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him in which case the High Court can interfere on appeal (s 423 (2)) or in revision¹⁰. Nor can the High Court direct the Judge to make a reference.¹¹

Where the jury have returned a clear and unambiguous verdict it is not open to the Judge to re-charge the jury and ask them to return a fresh verdict merely because he disagrees with their verdict. The Judge can only refer the case to the High Court under this section if he thinks fit to do so.¹² But where the jury return an unreasonable or absurd verdict the Judge is entitled to re-charge the jury and to ask them to return a proper verdict and need not make a reference to the High Court.¹³ (See also section 303, Note c)

If the charge is not supported by any evidence the reference under this section should never arise because according to s 259 the duty of the Judge is to direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty and such a direction is binding on the jury.¹⁴

As to applicability of the section to cases erroneously tried by jury, see Note 1.

2. Who can refer. — The words "in any such case" refer to cases tried before a Court of Session and consequently the word "Judge" must mean the Sessions Judge.

A reference under this section is not invalid in consequence of its having been made by a Judge who held the trial, but who, at the time of the reference, had ceased to be a Judge¹

It has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind that the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind is a High Court and not a Court of Session for the purposes of this section and that consequently, a Judge of that Court holding a sessions trial by jury has no power to make a reference under this section²

Under the Code as it stood before 1923, there were certain provisions such as § 451, under which a District Magistrate was empowered to make a reference under this section to the High Court³ These have now been repealed.

3 "Disagrees with the verdict." — As has been seen in Note 1, the Judge cannot make a reference under this section unless he disagrees with the verdict. Under the Code of 1882 the disagreement was required to be so complete that it was necessary in the ends of justice to make a reference. The words "so completely that" have been omitted in the present Code, with the result that the fact that the Judge disagrees with the verdict need not always involve the proposition that it would be in the ends of justice to make a reference. The words "ends of justice" mean something more than mere disagreement, and the necessity of submitting the case depends upon the gravity of the offence, and its prevalence and other considerations of a similar nature¹ A contrary view, namely, that unless the disagreement is such as to involve the necessity of making, in the ends of justice, a reference under this section, it is not a disagreement at all, has however been taken in the undermentioned cases² It is submitted that this view is not correct.

The word disagrees in this section means that the Judge thinks it necessary to express disagreement. In other words, the section requires that the Judge must not only disagree, but must think it necessary to express disagreement, for, otherwise, he would be bound to give judgment according to the verdict under Section 306³ Cases can be conceived of in which the Judge thinks it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case but yet does not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict. Thus, where the jury bring in a verdict of guilty but the Judge feels satisfied of the innocence of the accused, it may be said that the ends of justice require a reference to be made. But still, the Judge may think that the High Court is not likely to interfere as the verdict is not perverse and may therefore refrain from expressing disagreement with the verdict of the jury and proceed under S 306⁴. Thus, the mere fact that the ends of justice may, in the opinion of the Judge, require a reference to be made, does not mean that the Judge should think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict of the jury. But at the same time, it may be taken that if the ends of justice do not require a reference to be made, the Judge will not think it necessary to express disagreement with the verdict. See also the case cited below⁵.

The disagreement contemplated by the section is with the verdict and not merely with the grounds on which the verdict was given. Thus where the jury gave a verdict of acquittal and the Judge was of the opinion that the jury ought to have given the benefit of doubt to the accused rather than have believed the defence version, it was held that this did not amount to disagreement with the verdict⁶. But where the jury return a verdict of guilty and the Judge is doubtful about the absolute innocence of the accused but is distinctly of opinion that the benefit of doubt should be given to the accused, there is sufficient disagreement so as to entitle him to make a reference⁷.

Where the Judge directs the jury that if they find the accused not guilty of the offence charged, they might find him guilty of a lesser offence, and the jury give a verdict of not guilty but the Judge is of opinion that the accused is guilty of the minor offence, it has been held that it is sufficient disagreement within the meaning of this section⁸.

Where, however, on a charge of an offence under S 326, read with S 143, Penal Code, the jury acquitted the accused on the charge of nothing, and the Judge agreed with such verdict, it was held that the Judge could not say that he disagreed with the verdict so far as an offence under S 326 alone was concerned, and make a reference under this section⁹.

Where once the verdict is accepted, the Judge cannot, at the time of passing the sentence, change his mind and disagree with the verdict, so as to make a submission under this section¹⁰.

See also Note 4

4 "Is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice."—There is a difference of opinion on the question whether the power of the Judge to make a submission under this section is limited to cases where he is satisfied that the verdict is perverse or manifestly wrong or is unreasonable. According to the High Courts of Lahore¹ and Patna,² the power is not so limited but it is sufficient if he be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice. A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras has on the other hand, held that in order to enable the Judge to make a submission he should come to the conclusion that the verdict is one which is unreasonable.¹ A Full Bench decision of the Nagpur High Court also contains an opinion that the condition as to the Judge being clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case would be satisfied only if in the opinion of the Judge, the jury had arrived at a perverse verdict.² The decisions of the Calcutta High Court are conflicting.³ See also notes. It may be conceded that when the verdict is perverse or unreasonable or is not supported by evidence it should ordinarily be in the ends of justice to make a submission. In such cases the Judge should always make a reference.⁴ It may also be stated as a rule of guidance that where a verdict cannot be said to be unwarranted by the evidence in the case⁵ or is one which reasonable men might find on the evidence placed before them⁶ no reference should be made. But to say that the power is limited to cases where the verdict is considered perverse or unreasonable is to import conditions which are not found in the section and is not correct.

In view of the provisions of this section it is necessary that the trial Judge should for himself appreciate the evidence and form his own opinion on the case so as to see whether it is necessary for the ends of justice to make a reference against the verdict of the jury.⁷

Where the same body of persons sit as jurors as well as assessors in a case (see s 269 sub s (3)) the Judge ought not to use their reasons given for their opinions delivered as assessors as material for saying that their verdict as jury is perverse.¹⁰

Where the jury consider the accused guilty of offence λ while the Judge considers him guilty of offence λ but is punishable with the same amount of punishment as λ , the question whether the accused should be convicted of the one or the other offence is in the nature of an academic one and hardly worth a reference under this section.¹¹

5. "Submit the case."—Sub section (2) of this section provides that where a case is submitted under this section the Judge shall not record a judgment on any of the charges on which a particular accused has been tried. It is clear from this that a submission must be of the whole case against the particular accused and not merely of those charges on which he disagrees,¹ since, by this limited reference the High Court will be precluded from considering the entire evidence on the record against such accused.² In other words, the Judge should not divide the verdict of the jury, accept a part and make a submission with reference to the other part.³ See also Note 15

5 "In respect of such accused person"—This section does not intend that when there are several accused and the Sessions Judge is not prepared to accept the verdict of the jury against all but only against some, he should refer the whole case to the High Court. It contemplates only a reference in the case of those persons in respect of whom the Judge declines to accept the verdict. In respect of any other accused against whom the Judge agrees with the verdict of the jury, the Judge should convict and sentence or acquit him as the case may be.¹

7. Grounds of opinion to be recorded. — The Judge referring a case under this section must first of all record his opinion. If he does not record it, it is not possible for the High Court to pass orders on the reference¹ The letter of reference should further state the case, the verdict of the jury and concisely the ground upon which the Judge differs from the jury and considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court² It should, in other words, be complete in itself and the High Court should not be required to refer to the order sheet in order to gather the particulars the section requires to supply³ It was observed in the undermentioned case⁴ that the referring order should be in the nature of a judgment which would give the High Court a proper summary of the evidence and reasons of the learned Judge for holding it to be credible or otherwise Merely repeating remarks made in the charge to the jury and adding such vague remarks as "for these and other reasons I submit the case for the orders of the High Court" are not sufficient⁵ The Judge should state exactly what material portion of the evidence he believes to be true and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions⁶ The reference should, further, be based upon the evidence placed before the jury and not on case not so presented to them The High Court should not be asked to consider the case on matters not placed before the jury⁷

Where a reference shows that the Judge's opinion is that the verdict is perverse but this is not clearly stated, the High Court will presume that the reference has been made on the ground that the verdict is perverse⁸

It is unfair for the Judge to make reflections on the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by the record⁹

8. Reference against verdict of acquittal. — Where the Judge disagrees with a verdict of acquittal he should in his letter of reference state the offence which he considers to have been committed by the accused¹ But a mere omission to do so will not entail a rejection of the reference² It has been held that where the verdict of the jury is one of acquittal there is a much greater onus on the Judge to satisfy the High Court as to the necessity of interference than in cases of a verdict of guilty³ and that unless the verdict is manifestly wrong or perverse or unreasonable the Judge is not entitled to submit the case to the High Court in such cases⁴ In some cases it has been held that a submission on a pure question of fact is not permissible where the verdict is one of acquittal⁵ It is apprehended that this also means that unless the verdict is unreasonable or perverse (in which case it will be bad in law⁶) the case cannot be submitted to the High Court The question raised forms part of the larger question discussed in Note 4 viz whether the power of reference under this section is limited to cases where the verdict is perverse or unreasonable and as there does not seem to be any special rule of law applicable to cases of acquittal alone in this respect it is submitted that the considerations set forth in the above Note will also apply to such cases if the matter is regarded as one of law although special considerations may arise in the case of acquittals, as a matter of practice⁷

9 Charge under section 310 — Prior to the amendment of the section in 1933, it was held that in cases of reference under this section there was no conviction or acquittal in the Sessions Court and that it was for the High Court to convict or acquit the accused and that therefore it was not until after conviction by the High Court that the accused could be asked to plead to prior conviction¹ The present section as amended makes provision for proceeding under S 310 where there is a charge under that section even before the decision of the High Court

10 "Shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction" — It was held under the Code of 1861 in which there was no section corresponding to this that the Sessions Judge was bound to pass judgment even though he disagreed with the jury¹ It is now clear that no judgment should be recorded where the Judge refers the matter to the High Court

ing with the verdict thinks it proper to refer the case to the High Court it is desirable that the accused is kept in custody pending the reference and not released on bail¹

11. Powers of the High Court under this section — Sub section (1) specifies the powers which the High Court may exercise where a reference is made to it under this section. The High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto it shall after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charges framed and placed before it.

The words subject thereto were introduced into the section only in the year 1970. Before the said introduction it had been held that the powers of the High Court on a reference were not in any way affected or curtailed by S 418 or S 423 of the Code which limit the powers of the appellate Court in cases tried by jury, to interference on matters of law and that therefore the High Court could go into questions of fact as well as questions of law.¹ It has been held that the introduction of the words subject thereto is not inconsistent with the said view the object of such introduction being to clothe the High Court when acting under this section with all the powers as regards procedure, of a Court of appeal if for good reasons it desires to exercise any of them.²

There is however a difference of opinions as to the extent of the powers of the High Court to interfere on matters of fact. One view is —

- (1) that the guiding principle in exercising this power should be that the decision of the tribunal appointed by law to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused should not be touched except under strong circumstances.³

where there has been a verdict of not guilty, it is the practice not to reverse the verdict unless it is perverse or manifestly wrong¹⁵ A Full Bench of the High Court of Nagpur has held that even though the whole case is open on a reference under the section the High Court ought not to interfere with the verdict of the jury unless the High Court considers such verdict to be wrong beyond any reasonable doubt¹⁶

It is submitted that the first view is not correct There is nothing in the section to limit the power of the High Court to interfere in cases where the verdict is perverse or unreasonable Where the High Court considers on the evidence that the verdict ought not to be upheld it will in fact amount to a miscarriage of justice if the verdict is to be upheld by reason of a sort of conventional respect for the jury Further it may be noted that the section speaks of the opinion of the jury and not of the *verdict*¹⁷ The principle of the sanctity of the verdict need not be applied with strictness to the opinion of the jury

It is however necessary before the High Court can interfere under this section that it should come to the conclusion on the evidence that the decision of the jury is wrong Where the decision is correct or cannot be said to be wrong there is no room for any interference¹⁸ Where, on the other hand, the decision is perverse or unreasonable or against the evidence or is not supported by evidence the High Court will interfere¹⁹

though as it has been said before, its powers are not limited to the perversity or unreasonableness of the verdict

It has been held that when a confession comes before the High Court in appeal or upon a reference under this section or in any other manner it is open to the High Court to consider whether the making of the confession was caused by any such threat inducement or promise as is contemplated by S 24 of the Evidence Act²⁰

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case²¹ that the powers of the High Court under this section are controlled by S 537 and that consequently where there is no failure of justice, the High Court cannot interfere

12 Reference in case falling under S 449 — See Section 449 Note 7

13 "After giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury." — In arriving at a conclusion the High Court is required to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury. There is a difference of opinion as to the relative weight to be given to such opinions, one view being that the opinion of the jury must stand unless the evidence and opinion of the Judge show clearly that it is wrong and that in the interests of justice it ought to be reversed¹ a second view being that more weight should be given to the opinion of the Sessions Judge inasmuch as in addition to the fact that he has, equally with the jury, heard the witnesses he has been trained to appreciate evidence and gives reasons for his opinion,² a third view is that the opinion of the one is not entitled to more weight than that of the other and that they are both entitled to equal weight³ In the undermentioned case⁴ it was held that the measure of the relative weight to be attached to the opinions cannot be crystallized into an inflexible formula but depends upon the facts of each case though the trend of opinion is to prefer the opinion of the jurors

There is also a difference of opinions on the question whether the opinion of the jury includes the reasons for the verdict or whether it means the verdict only On the one hand, it has been held that the Judge has no power to ask the jury under S 303 the reasons for their verdict and that consequently the opinion of the jury does not include the reasons but only the verdict⁵ On the other hand it has been held that for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the advisability of making a reference under this section, the Judge is entitled to question the jury as to their reasons for their verdict and that the reasons so given are included in the word 'opinion' and can be considered by the High Court⁶ It has also been held that the word 'opinions' in this section is wider than the word 'verdict' in S 423, sub-s (2) and includes not only the final decision of the majority, but also the opinion of the minority⁷ The opinion of the Sessions Judge means the opinion expressed in the reference or at the hearing⁸ It does not include his speculations as to what external considerations, such as the conduct of the jury, might have affected the verdict of the jury⁹ The weight to be given to the opinion of the jury must depend to a considerable extent on the nature satisfactory or otherwise of the charge to the jury¹⁰

The jurisdiction exercised in such cases is not, however, original criminal jurisdiction³ although it is not also that of a Court of appeal.⁴

15 Verdict of jury in cases not triable by jury—Applicability of this section.—Where by mistake an offence which is triable with the aid of assessors is tried by jury, the Judge when he discovers the mistake may treat the trial as legal and refer the case to the High Court under this section if he disagrees with the verdict of the jury.¹ Where a charge is triable with the aid of the jury as assessors (s 269 sub s (3)) but is tried by the jury and a verdict is given the procedure though irregular is legal and a reference is competent under this section.²

Sub section (2) of this section which forbids recording of judgment of acquittal or of conviction applies only to charges which are tried by jury and not to charges which are tried with the aid of assessors. Thus where a case is triable with regard to some of the charges by a jury and with regard to others with the jury as assessors under s 300 sub s (3) the mere fact that a reference is made with regard to the charges triable by jury does not absolve the Court from proceeding under s 300 to judgment in respect of the other charges. The whole case should not be submitted.³ It has been held that in such a

16. Acquit or convict of any offence, etc — It has been seen in Note 11 that the whole case is open to the High Court and it can come to its own conclusion therein. In hearing a reference under this section the High Court can acquit the accused or convict him of any offence of which the jury could have convicted the accused on the charges framed and placed before them ¹. In cases falling within Ss 237 and 238 the accused can be convicted of an offence different from the one for which he was charged. So the High Court can, on hearing a reference under this section convict the accused of an offence different from the one he was charged with within the limits imposed by those two sections ². Thus in a case under S 302 of the Penal Code the High Court can convict the accused of an offence under S 304A of that Code even though the accused was not specifically charged under that section since such a case comes under Ss 237 and 238 of this Code ³. On a case submitted under this section the High Court can acquit the accused if it so thinks fit on facts notwithstanding that the jury have found the prisoner guilty ⁴ and it can convict the accused notwithstanding that the jury have found the prisoner not guilty ⁵.

by the prosecution¹ In such a case the Crown is the party who asks for a conviction and the prosecutor must begin the case and satisfy the High Court that there is a case calling upon the prisoner for an answer²

18 Notice of reference — This section is silent as to whether any notice of reference to the accused is necessary It is, however, fair to him that such notice should be given and that he should have time to bring forward any objection he may have to recommendations of the Sessions Judge¹

19. Difference between Judges hearing reference—Procedure — Where a reference is heard by two Judges and they differ in their opinions, the decision is not to be governed by the opinion of the senior Judge, the matter must be referred to a third Judge in the manner required by Section 409¹

20. Appeal. — Inasmuch as no judgment of acquittal or of conviction is to be recorded where a reference is made under this section there can be no appeal as from a Sessions Judge to the High Court¹ But where no reference is made it is clear that the judgment that must follow the verdict will be appealable under Ss. 417² and 418

A judgment passed by the High Court on a reference under this section is itself not open to appeal to the High Court³

G.—Re-trial of Accused after Discharge of Jury.

1. Legislative changes — There was no section corresponding to this in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 This section was first introduced in the Code of 1892

2 "Whenever the jury is discharged" — See Section 282 Note 2

3 Re-summoning of a jury. — In the undermentioned case¹ Rankin J observed as follows

"With reference to the question whether, had we thought that the discharge of the jury was illegal, we would have ordered a re-summoning of the old jury I only desire to say for myself that it would require very strong circumstances indeed to make me give an order for the re-summoning of a jury that have been at large since the 16th of August Taking one thing with another, it would require some little further time before the case possibly could be re-stated and it would be improper and inconvenient for persons to be re-summoned who have been released from their oath as jurors by an order of discharge and who therefore have been perfectly entitled in the interim to discuss the matter either with their friends or with the accused or with anybody they like. Such an order as that I hope will never be made by this Court except in very exceptional circumstance.

4. "The Judge shall make an entry" — In an order under this section that the accused should not be re-tried the Judge cannot pass remarks implying the guilt of the accused.¹ But the Judge can record his opinion that the accused is innocent.²

Where the Judge is of opinion that the accused should not be re-tried the passing of an order of acquittal is not technically correct the proper course is to make an entry as provided by this section though in either case in substance the effect is the same.³

Where the accused was tried three times but the Judge could not agree with the verdict of the jury in any trial it was held that as there must be a limit to the number of trials which an accused must be called upon to face the Judge should make an entry under this section that the accused should not be re-tried and it would operate as an acquittal by operation of law and that the holding of successive re-trials was not a ground for transfer of the case to a non-jury district.⁴

5 Re-trial of accused — As to whether and in what cases a re-trial will be barred under S 403, see S 403 Note 7.

1 Scope of the section — The Code provides for two modes of trial before the Sessions Court —

- (1) trial by jury, and
- (2) trial with the aid of assessors

Sections 297 to 307 provide for the procedure to be followed at the conclusion of a trial by jury after the arguments on either side have been completed. This section provides for the procedure to be followed at the conclusion of a trial with the aid of assessors. The following are some of the important points of distinction between the verdict of a jury and the opinions of assessors¹
